Baltimore & Ohio

Has the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad "turned the corner?" This is a question of much public interest at this time. Our special Analysis of this property, just issued, brings out both the weak and strong features of this situation, and definitely forecasts the future of the property from the standpoint of both preferred and common stockholders.

SEEKS TO ANNUL $100,000,000 BONDS

OPPOSES A STOCK INCREASE

C. H. Venner's Relative Charges Commissions to Morgan & Co. and Underwriters Were Exorbitant.

A suit was filed yesterday in the Supreme Court by James Pollitz against the New York Central Railroad Company, the New York State Realty and Terminal Company, and against a number of Directors of these two companies, seeking the annulment of the recent issue of $100,000,000 New York Central twenty-year 6 per cent. convertible debenture bonds. These bonds were actually issued and disposed of in entirety on May 1, but the suit contains the delated plea that the defendants be restrained from issuing the bonds. The court is also asked to enjoin the proposed increase of the capitalization of the New York Central from $300,000,000 to $400,000,000, a step which was contemplated to permit of the conversion of the new debentures into stock.

The individual defendants are William K. Vanderbilt, Chauncey M. Depew, Frederick W. Vanderbilt, William Rockefeller, William H. Newman, George F. Baker, Marvin Hughitt, William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Alfred H. Smith, Harold S. Vanderbilt, Ogden Mills, Robert S. Lovett, Horace E. Andrews, Leonard J. Hackney, and Frank J. Jerome.

James Pollitz, the plaintiff, is the man who recently won a judgment of approximately $6,000,000 against three Directors of the Wabash Railroad Company. It was admitted yesterday that he was related by marrige to C. H. Venner, who has brought several suits against corporations contemplating reorganization. The Pollitz suit follows the unsuccessful plan of Venner to stop the consolidation of the old New York Central & Hudson River road with the Lake Shore and the subsequent unsuccessful plan of Venner to prevent the issuing of the $100,000,000 debentures by appeals to various public service commissions in the States through which the New York Central lines pass. This is the first time an attempt has been made in any court to enjoin the issuing of new securities.

Charge of Wastefulness.

The principal contention in the complaint is that the $100,000,000 issue is "unnecessary and wasteful" and illegal, and that it will result in a loss to the New York Central Railroad Company and to Pollitz, as a holder of 120 shares of the company.

It is contended further that the 6 per cent. interest paid on the bonds is excessive and above the market rate of interest.

A large part of the complaint is devoted to the arrangement whereby the bonds were disposed of. Under this arrangement J. P. Morgan & Co., as fiscal agents of the New York Central, received a flat 1½ per cent. of the $100,000,000 for their services. In addition a syndicate, headed by J. P. Morgan & Co., received 2½ per cent. for guaranteeing to dispose of all bonds not subscribed for by stockholders of the New York Central. It was permissible for stockholders to subscribe for the new bonds to the extent of 40 per cent. of their holdings. The syndicate's commission of 2½ per cent. applied to all bonds except those purchased by Directors of the New York Central.

It is alleged in the complaint that a number of the defendant Directors are interested in the syndicate, and thus profit by the alleged exorbitant commissions. The exact language of the complaint in this connection is as follows:

> The commissions to J. P. Morgan & Co. and the syndicate will result in the payment of exorbitant and unconscionable profits to said fiscal agents and the said underwriting syndicate; for, as the plaintiff is informed and believes, said subscription rights of the stockholders are supposed to be of great value and will be largely availed of by them, so that the underwriting syndicate will not be called upon to take any substantial amount of said bonds, and the company will receive no adequate or valuable consideration for said commissions.
> On information and belief a number of the defendant Directors are interested in said syndicate and in its profits and commissions. A portion of their interest in said profits and commissions results from their beneficial ownership of stocks in various corporations, which in their own corporate names, or in the name of their agents or representatives, are subscribers to the syndicate agreement, as this plaintiff is informed and believes.

Charge Against Directors Denied.

It was never stated officially how much of the $100,000,000 issue was subscribed for at par by the stockholders of the New York Central. It has been stated, however, that the syndicate was finally called upon to dispose of more than $5,000,000 of the bonds. The 2½ per cent. commission, however, was paid on all of the bonds except those taken by the Directors. What amount the Directors took has not been stated.

A member of the syndicate, in discussing the suit yesterday, said that the allegations that Directors of the New York Central had profited indirectly by the commissions paid by the New York Central were wholly without foundation. Mr. Pollitz, he said, could have ascertained the truth if he had desired to do so.

A Director of the New York Central stated yesterday that the railroad's reply, which must be made within twenty days, would contain a general denial of the allegations in the complaint. He said that it was significant that the suit was not begun until after the bonds had been issued. The bonds were dated May 1, he pointed out, whereas he had not been served with the complaint until three days after May 1.

The suit, pending a decision, will have no effect on the status of the debenture bonds. A decision in favor of Pollitz, of course, would affect their status. It may be a year or more before the suit comes up in the courts.

J. Aspinwall Hodge appears in the action as attorney for Pollitz. He was also the attorney in the seven-year legal fight against the Wabash Directors, now lodged in the Appellate Division Court.

ASK NEW FORM FOR BIDS.

Merchants Protest to Quartermaster General of Army.

Protest against a recent change in the form of advertisement for bids for Government supplies has been made to Major Gen. J. B. Aleshire, Quartermaster General of the Army, by the Merchants' Association. The reasons for the protest are set in a letter addressed to General Aleshire on behalf of the association by S. C. Mead, Secretary, which says:

"The Merchants' Association of New York, having among its membership many of the individuals and concerns which bid for Government supplies, including the supplies for the Quartermaster Corps, earnestly calls to your attention its belief that the change in the form of advertisement for bids, as adopted in the advertisement for 'proposals for clothing and equipage, for the fiscal year 1916, to be opened May 17, 1915,' whereby the quantities to be supplied by the successful bidder are made entirely indefinite, and the time for furnishing such supplies is not limited, except by the end of the fiscal year 1916, will operate to the detriment both of the Government and the bidders.

"We would, therefore, earnestly urge that the advertisement be withdrawn and that the former practice of advertising for specific quantities to be ordered and to be delivered within reasonable and specific periods should be resumed."

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, May 4.—Pressure is very low over the Middle Atlantic States and continues low westward to the Missouri River, with resulting rains in the Atlantic States, the lake region, the Ohio and upper Mississippi Valleys. There is also a well-defined depression over extreme Western Texas that has caused general showers over Central and East Texas, and another in California that has caused rains in that State and Nevada.

It is decidedly cooler in the Central Valleys and the Gulf States, and low temperatures continue to the northward and westward.

Heavy frosts or freezing temperatures occurred quite generally Tuesday morning in the middle plateau and along both slopes of the Rocky Mountains.

There will be showers Wednesday in New England, the Middle Atlantic, and the West Gulf States, and on Thursday in the East Gulf States. There will be rain or snow Wednesday in the central Rocky Mountain region and rains Wednesday and Thursday in the Pacific States, extending Thursday into the plateau regions. Elsewhere fair weather will prevail Wednesday and Thursday. It will be somewhat cooler Wednesday in Virginia and Carolinas, and over the remainder of the country temperatures will remain generally below the seasonal average except in the North Pacific States.

Winds for Wednesday and Thursday along the North Atlantic Coast will be moderate to fresh, mostly northeast to north; Middle Atlantic Coast, fresh north and northwest; South Atlantic Coast, moderate west and northwest, except generally south off the South Florida Coast.

FORECASTS TODAY AND THURSDAY.

New York—Local rain Wednesday; Thursday cloudy.

New Jersey—Cloudy Thursday; probably showers in the morning; Thursday fair.

New England—Local rain Wednesday; Thursday fair.

Eastern Pennsylvania—Cloudy Wednesday; fair Thursday.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

AT A STATED TERM OF THE DISTRICT Court of the United States held in and for the Southern District of New York, at the Post Office Building, Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, the 20th day of April, 1915. Present, Hon. Learned Hand, District Judge.—In the matter of JOSEPH H. STOPPANI and WALTER B. HOTCHKIN, individually and as co-partners doing business under the firm name and style of STOPPANI & HOTCHKIN, Bankrupts.—In Bankruptcy.—No. 19861.—Order requiring filing of claims.

An order having been granted herein the 1st day of April, 1915, requiring all creditors of the above-named bankrupts and all other persons, firms or corporations, either claiming specific stocks, bonds, securities, sums of money, or asserting any alleged preferential claims against the general assets of the estate herein, which are or may be in the possession, custody or control of the trustee herein, including the stocks and securities mentioned in the petition annexed to said order, and filed in the office of the Clerk of this Court the 1st day of April, 1915, to show cause why they should not file any and all such claims with the Special Master to be appointed for such purpose, and why the claims so filed, if any, should not be referred to said Special Master for hearing, testimony and report, and why, in default of the filing and proof of such claims at a time and place and in a manner which this Court may direct, said creditors, persons, firms or corporations, and any and all of them, should not be barred, foreclosed and enjoined from making or asserting any such claim or claims; on filing the said order to show cause dated April 1st, 1915, and upon the petition of Abraham S. Gilbert, the trustee herein, thereto annexed and filed in the office of the Clerk of this Court, and upon all the papers and proceedings had and taken herein, and proof of the due service of said order to show cause and said petition by the publication of the said order in The New York Times once a week for two successive weeks (to wit, April 7th and April 15th, 1915,) and by mailing a copy to each of the creditors, or other persons interested herein, at their respective addresses as the same appears on the books of the bankrupts and in the schedules herein, and after hearing Leon Lauterstein, attorney for the trustee, in support of said motion, and there being no appearance in opposition thereto,

Now, on motion of Leon Lauterstein, attorney for the Trustee herein, it is Ordered that all creditors of the above-named bankrupts and all other persons, firms or corporations, either claiming specific stocks, bonds, securities, sums of money, or other assets, or the proceeds thereof, or asserting alleged preferential claims against the general assets of the estate herein, which are in the possession, custody or control of the trustee herein, be, and they hereby are, directed to file duly verified statements in writing of any and all such claims which they or any of them have with Honorable Macgrane Coxe as Special Master at his office, No. 233 Broadway, City of New York, Borough of Manhattan, on or before the 15th day of May, 1915; and it is further

Ordered that any and all creditors or other claimants claiming specific bonds, stocks, securities, sums of money, or other assets, or the proceeds thereof, and any and all creditors or other persons asserting preferential claims against the general assets of the estate herein, who shall not file their claims to the said stocks, bonds, securities, sums of money, or other assets, or the proceeds thereof, and to the general assets of the estate herein asserting their right, title and interest therein and thereto on or before the 15th day of May, 1915, be, and they hereby are, forever barred from making any claim against or asserting any right, title or interest, in or to the said stocks, bonds, securities, sums of money, or other assets of the estate herein, or the proceeds thereof, in the possession, custody or control of the trustee herein; and it is further

Ordered that the determination of all right, title and interest, if any, in and to any or all of the stocks, bonds, securities, sums of money, or other assets, or the proceeds thereof, or to the general assets of the estate herein, be, and the same hereby are, referred to Honorable Macgrane Coxe, who is hereby appointed Special Master for that purpose to hear and determine the rights of such creditors and claimants, and the said Special Master is directed in all respects to determine, adjust and adjudicate the right, title, interest, equities, claims and liens therein and thereto, and to report to this Court his determination thereon; and it is further Ordered that service of this order be made upon each of the creditors, or other persons interested herein, by mailing on or before the 3d day of May, 1915, a copy of this order to each of them at their respective addresses as the same may appear upon the books and schedules of the alleged bankrupts, and by publishing a copy thereof in The New York Times once a week for three successive weeks; the publication each week to be on different days of the week which shall be and is hereby declared to be sufficient service thereof.

THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Washington Heights Sale on Amsterdam Avenue—Big Lease Near Times Square—Active Auction Market—Vanderbilt Place at Deepdale Leased by Michael Dreicer—Thirteen New Bronx Apartments.

Quiet conditions prevailed in the realty market yesterday. On the upper west side, in the Washington Heights district, the large vacant plot of four lots at the southwest corner of Amsterdam Avenue and 140th Street was sold by the Oothout estate to the Surety Land Company. The property has frontages of 100 feet on each thoroughfare and is one of the few remaining vacant parcels in that part of the city adapted to high class apartment house improvement. It is opposite the Mechanical Arts building of the College of the City of New York. The buying company is a subsidiary of the Columbus Circle Construction Company which is erecting the new Hearst building at Columbus Circle with Broadway and Central Park frontages.

The brokers in the transaction were M. Cohn & Co.

$110,000 Lease in Times Square Section.

Dr. E. Harrison Griffin has leased for a term of years at an aggregate rental of 110,000, the three buildings 110-112-114 West Forty-fifth Street, between Broadway and Sixth Avenue to Charles L'Homme, who is at present the occupant of 110-112 West Forty-fifth Street. Mr. L'Homme will make extensive alterations to 114 and use the same in connection with his present buildings. J. Arthur Fischer was the broker in the transaction.

Title Passes to Fifth Avenue Corner.

The Ashton Holding Company has taken title to the row of four five-story flats on the northeast corner of Fifth Avenue and 101st Street, 100.11 by 100, sold last week by the Irving Savings Institution. The latter has taken a $160,000 mortgage for five years at 4½ per cent.

Tenement Sale.

The five-story building at 40 East Broadway, 25 by 69.8, between Catherine and Market Streets, has been sold by George G. Hallock, Jr's Sons for the estate of Mary Crosby to Wisoff & Brauerwein. The property stands on part of the famous old Rutgers estate and has been in possession of the family members for over 200 years.

Jacob Kaplan has sold to an investing client of Ames & Company, 1,466 Second Avenue, a five-story tenement with stores, on a lot 25 by 88.6, located between Seventy-six and Seventy-seventh Streets.

Many Auction Offerings.

An unusually large list of properties was offered at auction yesterday by Joseph P. Day in the Vesey Street sales rooms, and some of the parcels caused spirited bidding. The five-story apartment house at 71 Lexington Avenue, below Twenty-sixth Street, 24.8 by 100, offered at voluntary sale, went to F. E. Barnes for a client for $33,800. The four-story dwelling at 18 East Sixty-fifth Street, 18 by 100.5, was knocked down at $53,500. Among the other properties were the southeast corner of St. Ann's Avenue and 134th Street, vacant, 80 by 100, voluntary sale, to F. J. Flynn for $19,700; a plot 50 by 75, on the south side of East 134th Street, 300 feet west of Southern Boulevard, voluntary sale to W. M. Jackson for $4,700; west side of Wadsworth Avenue, 90 feet north of 190th Street, vacant, 190 by 98, to F. L. Bacon for $64,000; the west side of Wadsworth Avenue, 280 feet north of 190th Street, 160 by 98, to F. L. Bacon for $55,000, and the southwest corner of Sedgwick Avenue and Palisade Place, 196 by 104, vacant, to R. Roebbelen for $7,750.

Recent Buyers.

M. Marshall is the buyer of the plot, 200 by 200, on the west side of Valentine Avenue, 98 feet south of 182d Street, sold last week.

Fred F. French & Company is the buyer of the plot of seventeen lots at the corner of Post Avenue and 204th Street, in the Dyckman section, sold about ten day ago by the Altmayer Estate. The buyer will improve the site with six five-story flat houses.

Michael Dreicer Leases Deepdale.

Deepdale, the estate of William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., in the Wheatley Hills section of Long Island, has been leased for the season to Michael Dreicer. L'Ecluse, Washburn & Co. negotiated the lease.

Thirteen New Bronx Apartments.

Plans were filed in the Bronx for thirteen five-story apartment structures. Of these ten will be erected by the Gaines Roberts Company in the Fordham Heights section, five on the Boulevard and Concourse, and five on Creston Avenue north of Fordham Road. The total cost will be $240,000. Harry T. Howell is the architect. On the northeast corner of Hull Avenue and Mosholu Parkway the Hibbard Realty Company will erect three apartments at a cost of $130,000.

Long Island.

L'Ecluse, Washburn & Co. have sold to David Davis of New York, two plots at Louona Park, Corona, Borough of Queens, fronting 100 feet on both Flushing Bay and Jackson Avenue. The consideration was about $10,000.

Westchester County.

Commercial Leases.

J. B. English has leased for a term of years for W. J. Mulhall to M. Grippa, the building at 114 West Forty-eighth Street, as a restaurant.

Duross Company have leased the stores 671 and 677 Hudson Street, to Demorest Company, Inc., and the stores 693 Hudson Street to Charles Moewes.

Clark T. Chambers has leased to Repetti, for Herbert & Huesgen, the store at 2 East Forty-second Street.

G. P. Butterly has leased for the Dochtermann Realty Company to a client of Douglas Robinson, Charles L. Brown & Co., for a term of years on a net basis, the former D. H. McAlpin tobacco factory, 732, 734, 736 East Eleventh Street, on plot 75 by 90. The lessee will rebuild the structure and lease.

Mortgage Loans Placed.

M. Morgenthau Jr. Co. have placed a first mortgage loan of $60,000 for the F. M. S. Corporation (Aaron Goodman) on the five-story apartment house, on plot 65 by 100, located on the northerly side of West 170th Street, 55 feet east of Audubon Avenue.

The New York Life Insurance Company has loaned $270,000 to the Antler Realty Company (Goldberg & Kramer) on the new twelve-story loft building, at 57 and 61 West Thirty-eighth Street, near Sixth Avenue.

The loan is for five years at 5 per cent. A second mortgage of $55,000 is furnished by Philip Jacobs for a similar term at the same rate of interest. William A. White & Sons negotiated the larger loan.

Rush to Pay Taxes.

All previous records for the payment of taxes by property owners in Queens were broken on last Saturday, the first day the payments became due, when there was received at the office of Anthony Moors, Receiver of Taxes for the borough, $527,576.

This is an increase of nearly $100,000 over any previous day at the Queens bureau.

Real Estate Notes.

The work of tearing down the old Calumet Club recently purchased by Burton Brothers & Co, began yesterday. An eleven-story building will be erected by the buyers on the site, 49.5 by 100, on the northeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street.

Plans have been filed for altering over the six three-story dwellings on the southwest corner of Washington Square West and Washington Place for Frederick D. Fricke into a hotel at a cost of $50,000. Henry A. Koelble is the architect. The building will form an addition to the adjoining Hotel Holley.

HOLDS MRS. CARMAN KILLED BY DAYLIGHT

District Attorney Also Asserts the Murder of Mrs. Bailey Was Planned.

Special to The New York Times.

MINEOLA, L. I., May 4.—District Attorney Lewis J. Smith pitched into the actual trial of Mrs. Florence C. Carman here late this afternoon with a show of vim, confidence and determination which amazed those who had attended the first trial and which appeared to alarm the cool defendant and those with her.

In opening the case for the posecution at 4:15 o'clock in the afternoon, after five hours had ben spent in the selection of seven more jurors, and after Justice Blackmar had given him sudden notice of an extra session of the court in the hope that the case could be ended by Saturday, Mr. Smith not only repeated the accusations against Mrs. Carman which he made in his opening addess at the first trial, but disclosed new points the prosecution would attempt to prove this time. If substantiated, these charges would prove most damaging to Mrs. Carman's case.

The prosecution would prove this time, Mr. Smith declared, that Mrs. Carman fired the shot which killed Mrs. Lulu D. Bailey in Dr. Carman's office "in daylight" and "from outside." Previously the prosecution attempted to show that the shot was fired a considerable time before the police were notified, but the exact time of the shooting never was settled, and the defense sprung a surprise at the end of the trial by producing a witness who swore that it was dark and that he saw a man flee across the Carman lawn and jump a picket fence separating it from an adjoining lawn. It was too dark to see the man distinctly, according to this testimony.

Charges Deliberate Murder.

It was in concluding his short opening address, though, that the District Attorney, flushed and full of fight, declared the prosecution would show that the murder was not committed on the spur of the moment, but had been planned with extreme caution and deliberation.

"We shall show," he shouted, "that this was a deliberate, premeditated crime, committed with intent to kill; we shall show you, gentlemen of the jury, that the shot was fired by a woman, and that the woman was the defendant, and we shall show you that there was a motive, and that it was jealousy and suspicion of her husband."

Mrs. Carman appeared to turn paler when the District Attorney addressed the jury, but the muscles of her face did not even twitch. Today the smile she showed yesterday and throughout the first trial was missing.

The twelfth juryman was selected at 3:51 P. M. It had been supposed that the jury would be completed by noon and that the prosecution would begin its case at the afternoon session, but when the selecting of jurors dragged to such a late hour it was expected Justice Blackmar would adjourn court and start the actual trying of the case tomorrow morning. Justice Blackmar declared a recess instead of adjournment, however, and convened court less than a half hour later with the announcement that he would sit until 7 o'clock. He wanted to avoid keeping the jurors later than Friday or Saturday, he said.

The jurors listened intently to the terse opening.

"The defendant is charged with murder in the first degree," Mr. Smith said. "It is impossible for me to anticipate everything the witness will say, but I can tell you the story of the crime and will do so as briefly as possible.

Shooting of Mrs. Bailey.

"On the afternoon of June 30 Lulu D. Bailey, who lived on William Street, in Hempstead, with her mother, her husband and her young son and daughter, left her home to visit a friend in Rockville Centre. We shall show you that she left Rockville Centre for her home about 6 o'clock, and that she was seen in Freeport, near the Carman home, about 7."

The District Attorney described in a few words the location of the doctor's office, of the reception room adjoining, in which Mrs. Bailey waited a short time, and of the witchen through which Mrs. Carman, he contended, passed before and after the shooting, and said that he would show that the kitchen connected with the office through the pantry. It was through this entrance to the office that Celia Coleman testified last time that she got a glimpse of the doctor's office after th eshooting.

"We shall show, gentlemen, that Mrs. Bailey went into the office," Mr. Smith continued, "and that, as she was about to 'eave, there was a crash at the northwesterly window, a hand was thrust through, a pistol fired, and a bullet entered Mrs. Bailey's back, as the result of which she died in two or three minutes. We shall show that there was a screen over this window, fastened from the inside by a hook, and that the hook was unfastened and the screen propped open when the shooting occurred. We shall show that before the shooting, in April, the defendant went to this same window when there was another woman in the office—a nurse—and watched the doctor and the nurse, and that when she saw money passed to the nurse she rapped on the window, rushed around to the door, and slapped the face of the nurse."

Mr. Smith, in speaking of the motive for the murder, referred to the testimony regarding the dictograph which Mrs. Carman admitted she installed in the Doctor's office to listen to his conversations with patients. The dictograph, he said, was sometimes called "a mechanical eavesdropper."

"We shall show," he said, "that the members of the family thought of about everything else but notifying the police until about one hour had elapsed."

This is a point which has been contested hotly by the opposing sides.

George A. Fairfield, a surveyor and civil engineer of Freeport, whom the District Attorney employed, had to make charts of the Carman house and lawn, was the first witness for the prosecution. His charts were entered as evidence as at the last trial, and he identified and explained them. Justice Blackmar took great interest in them, leaving his bench to go to the chart for close scrutiny. Photographs also were introduced as evidence.

Photograph Ruled Out.

In cross-examination George M. Levy, who is conducting Mrs. Carman's case himself this time, questioned the surveyor at length, and attempted to have some photographs taken by the defense entered along with the prosecution's. Mr. Smith was on his feet at once, and although the surveyor had admitted that one photograph offered by Mr. Levy was a fair photographic representation of the appearance of the Carman house and lawn as seen from the east, succeeded in having it ruled out, for the time at least, on the ground that, owing to the position from which it was taken, it made the picket fence on the west side appear much closer to the house than it really was. This may have bearing on the testimony of the defense's witness, who said he saw a man leap that fence.

Mrs. Jennie Duryea, mother of the murdered Mrs. Bailey, was called next. She was still in deep mourning, and wore a long black veil and black gloves. As she repeated the story told at the first trial there was a catch in her voice when she told of her daughter's departure for Rockville Centre and of next seeing her dead the following morning. She sobbed when called on to identify the dark blue dress Mrs. Bailey had worn on the night she was murdered.

Mrs. Carman gazed, expressionless, except for tightly pursed lips, at the second witness for the prosecution, even when Mrs. Duryea, on being asked if the defendant had ever extended her sympathy after Mrs. Bailey was shot in the Carman home, answered, "Never."

Catherine Haggerty of Rockville Centre, who was not called at the first trial, was summoned to tell of Mrs. Bailey's visit to that town on the afternoon of June 30. She said Mrs. Bailey left the house at 96 Henderson Avenue, Rockville Centre, a little after 6 o'clock. Mr. Levy asked how she remembered the hour, and was told that the 6 o'clock whistle had just blown.

A real estate dealer of Hempstead who said he knew Mrs. Bailey by sight testified that he had seen her, from a trolley car, at Grove and Merrick Road, Freeport, at about 7:10, going in the direction of Dr. Carman's house. Mr. Levy asked the witness if he did not think he had an excellent memory to remember so well and if he had not been in a saloon. The answer was negative. Fred E. Cornell, a Hempstead undertaker, told of having Mrs. Bailey's body embalmed and said that Mrs. Carman went once to view the body, and was accompanied by Mr. Levy, who remained close by her side all the time.

Course of the Bullet.

Dr. Howard M. Phipps, one of the three physicians who performed the autopsy, described the course of the bullet as upward from the point at which it entered the body, near the right shoulder blade, and indicated that Mrs. Bailey would have become a mother early this year.

Miss Madeline Bailey, daughter of Mrs. Bailey, was called to the stand for the first time. She, too, was in mourning, wearing a neat black dress, a black straw hat with two feathers, and a white collar, which contrasted prettily with her light, curling hair and comely features. The slim little girl told of returning from a telephone exchange where she was employed and reaching her house at about 9:25 o'clock at night. A few minutes later, she said, a telephone call notified the family that something had happened to Mrs. Bailey in Freeport. She never learned who was speaking on the other end of the wire, she said.

Mr. Levy's cross-examination was confined to one question.

"How far from the place you work do you live?" he asked.

"About a mile," answered Miss Bailey.

It was not quite 6 o'clock when she left the stand. Coroner Corodon Norton, of Freeport, had been called as a witness for the prosecution, but had left the room when it looked as though the examination of witnesses could not be reached until tomorrow morning. He could not be found and, although Justice Blackmar had announced he would sit until 7 o'clock, the session was closed, as no more witnesses could be reached on short notice.

Justice Blackmar asked whether the prosecution's witnesses could be finished with tomorrow. Mr. Smith said laconically that he did "not think so." In closing the session the Justice cautioned the purors against discussing the case among themselves while detained at the Garden City Hotel, and added, "also, gentlemen, I wouldn't read any of the newspapers if I were you." Later he snggested that the two court officers placed in charge of the purors might clip out all references to the Carman case and then let the jlrors have the nswapapers.

Celia Coleman, the negro maid who worked in the Carman home at the time of the shooting and who was the State's chief witness at the last trial, when she changed the story she had told at the Coroner's inqpuest, will be called to the witness stand tomorrow, it is expected.

New Jurors Chosen.

The seven jurymen selected yesterday from the emergensy panel of 100 after the original panel had been exhausted with the selection of only five jurors on Monday were:

NO. 8—ALFRED W. POOLE, 42 years old, a carpenter of Farmingdale; married.

NO. 9—AUGUST D. AMEND, 40 years old, decorator, of East Meadow; married.

NO. 10—ARRENDER ABRAMS, 45 years old, an oyster planter of Lynbrook; married.

NO. 11—WALTER MUNSON, 42 years old, a dealer in coal and wood, living at Port Washington; married.

NO. 12—ERNEST A. STREESEMAN, 46 years old, a farmer of Central Park, L. I.; married.

Of the twelve jurymen, eleven are married and one is a widower. Forty-seven talesmen were called to the stand before the box was filled. Twenty-two were dismissed after challenges for cause by the District Attorney, eleven were dismissed on the District Attorney's peremptory challenges, and seven were dismissed on peremptory challenges by the defendant.

While Mr. Levy, who, since the first trial, has adopted darkened eyeglasses, which counterbalance his boyish appearance to some extent, is Mrs. Carman's attorney of record, she took the reins in her own hands today even more than yesterday and acted as her own chief counsel. She moved her chair as closely to the counsel table as any of the lawyers sat, and had paper and pencil before her all the time. Not a juryman was agreed on by Mr. Levy before Mrs. Carman had scrutinized the candidate's face carefully and given her approval.

A former New York City Police Lieutenant, David A. Gillespie, now retired and living in Freeport, was one of the talesmen. He answered all questions promptly and was accepted by District Attorney Smith. Mr. Levy consulted with Mrs. Carman and asked him if he "could divorce his mind from the New York policemen's view that nearly all people arrested were guilty." Mr. Smith objected to the manner in which the question was put and Justice Blackmar asked the former Lieutenant if that was the New York policemen's viewpoint. It was not, Mr. Gillespie said.

In answer to Mr. Levy's questioning Mr. Gillespie said that he would render his verdict entirely on the evidence brought before the jury, and Mr. Levy talked with Mrs. Carman earnestly for a while, apparently urging the selection of the man. Mrs. Crman finally whispered a word to him and he used a peremptory challenge.

One of the questions which Mr. Levy began asking prospective jurors today was whether, at the end of the trial, they would return a verdict of "guilty" if they felt convinced personally that Mrs. Carman had murdered Mrs. Bailey, but the fact had not been proved beyond reasonable doubt by the prosecution.

HACKENSACK.—The authorities in Maywood have in their custody a man answering the description given by Miss Florence Dater of Mahwah, a nurse at the Hackensack Hospital, who was attacked by an unknown man late Monday night. The prisoner was arrested yesterday because his face was scratched in many places, and because his stories as to his whereabouts on Monday night conflicted.

PASSAIC.—Alfred Scribner, the four-year-old son of Max Scribner of 14 Grace Avenue, Clifton, who was struck by an Erie Railroad train Monday, died yesterday in the General Hospital.

PASSAIC.—Announcement was made yesterday by Leith Bremner, proprietor of The Passaic Daily Herald, that the paper had been sold to Charles R. Log and associates of Chester, Penn. It is not expected that any change in the policy of the publication will be made.

ELIZABETH.—The one hundred and forty-third convention of the Episcopal Diocese of New Jersey opened in Trinity Church here yesterday, with the Right Rev. Paul G. Matthews, elected Bishop a few months ago, presiding. The Rev. Howard E. Thompson of Woodbury was chosen secretary. The Rev. Winfield S. Baer, rector of Trinity, welcomed the delegates and visitors. The Rev. John R. Harding, D. D., gave an address on modern work.

IRONIA.—Louis Bronstein and his family were driven from home by fire yesterday for the second time in two weeks. The family had gone to a small cottage after the burning of their sixteen-room house.

SUCCASUNNA.—The Rev. Ralph Levy was installed last night as pastor of the Succasunna Presbyterian Church, which the late Rev. Dr. Elijah W. Stoddard served for fifty years. The new pastor came here in 1913 as assistant to the late pastor.

TRENTON.—Asserting that the taxes on fifty-seven pieces of property in New Jersey are too high, the Postal Telegraph Company sought yesterday to have the State Board of Equalization of Taxes reduce these taxes. The company asks that a reduction of about $100,000 be made on their properties. The board took no action.

SAFFORD CASE GOES TO THE JURY TODAY

DEFENSE ASSAILS OSBORNE

Witnesses Swear He Was in Providence on Days Girl Asserts He Was with Her.

The case of Franklin D. Safford, who is charged with having committed perjury in identifying James W. Osborne as Oliver Osborne, who took a room in a Plainfield, N. J., hotel with Rae Tanzer, will go to the jury in the United States District Court today. Judge Hough will deliver his charge to the jurors as soon as court convenes at 10:30 o'clock this morning.

Benjamin Slade, in summing up yesterday afternoon for the defense, denounced James W. Osborne as the man who had wrecked the life of Miss Tanzer. United States District Attorney H. Snowden Marshall concluded the case for the Government by assailing David Slade and Maxwell Slade, who were Miss Tanzer's lawyers in her breach of promise suit against Mr. Osborne, as blackmailers who would be permitted to "ply their trade" if the jury failed to deal justly with Safford, whom Mr. Marshall described as a "poor, broken-down bum" hired by the Slades.

Benjamin Slade, the elder brother of David and Maxwell, several times objected to Mr. Marshall's statements, but the District Attorney was allowed to proceed from attack to attack, finally telling the jury that, if the "Slades had gotten away with the Tanzer case they would have risen to the top of the blackmail bar."

Mr. Osborne sat by the side of his wife throughout Benjamin Slade's denunciation of him. The lawyer described Mr. Osborne as a man of great power and influence, who had considered himself immune from charges by an insignificant girl, and who, when finally cornered, had turned the machinery of the United States Government to his defense. Mr. Slade also attempted to make capital out of the disappearance of Oliver Osborne, ridiculing the story of his single reported appearance.

Osborne Then in Providence.

In the morning session, the Government introduced testimony to show that on seven days when Rae Tanzer said she was with Oliver Osborne, James W. Osborne was in Providence, R. I., participating in the trial of a case. Mr. Osborne, using a stenographer's minutes to guide him, testified that on Nov. 30 and Dec. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, 1914, days on which Rae Tanzer met Oliver Osborne, he himself was in the United States District Court representing the defense in the case of the Government against Metcalf and de Kay. He read from the minutes what he said were remarks he had made in the court on some of the days mentioned. He said that he spent Nov. 29, a Sunday, in Providence working on the case with Walter H. Barney, who was associated with him in the defense.

Mr. Barney, a Providence lawyer, corroborated Mr. Osborne regarding this Sunday, and added that, of his own knowledge, Mr. Osborne was in the court room throughout the trial sessions on the other days mentioned. These sessions, except that on Dec. 2, he said, lasted until 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and the fastest trains between Providence and New York required from four to five hours for the trip. According to this testimony, it would have been impossible for Mr. Osborne to see Rae Tanzer at the times she named, for she said he sometimes met her in daytime and always early in the evening.

George Farnell, a lawyer, who was the shorthand reporter of the Providence trial, testified that Mr. Osborne was present for every session of the hearing, and William B. Cross, the clerk of the Providence court, corroborated him with emphatic language.

Mr. Osborne, when he was on the stand, gave practically the same account of Oliver Osborne's visit to his apartments in the Sherman Square Hotel on the morning of March 19 as he made public at the time of Rae Tanzer's arrest for using the mails to defraud. He was corroborated by his wife and Edwin W. Willcox, one of his law partners, who was present at the interview.

All three of these witnesses described Oliver Osborne as about an inch taller than J. W. Osborne, with light-colored eyes, of trim figure, and with a straight nose. He in no way resembled James W. Osborne, they said. Each of the witnesses told how special attention had been called to Oliver's appearance.

Warned Oliver Osborne.

Mr. Osborne testified that he had advised Oliver that if he had taken Rae Tanzer to Painfield, N. J., for improper purposes he had violated the law. The witness further testified that Oliver asserted that every time he had been with Miss Tanzer he had given her money.

Regarding the disappearance of Oliver Osborne, the witness said that the man had promised to go to the United States District Attorney's office at 4 o'clock in the afternoon on March 20 and had come forward voluntarily in the case and gone unaccompanied from Mr. Osborne's office to his home. He had no reason to suppose that such a man would disappear, Mr. Osborne said.

"After a man had done for me what this man had done I would not have had him locked up," he added.

Rae Tanzer was the only witness called by the defense in rebuttal. She once more identified James W. Osborne as Oliver and reaffirmed that the two men sent to her by Mr. Osborne had carried the letter she delivered to James W. under the name of Oliver. She also denied that she had ever received "any money from any man."

In summing up, Mr. Slade first attempted to make an important point out of his interpretation of testimony given by Reuben Peckham of Mr. Osborne's office, who said that he first had talked with Mr. Osborne about the Tanzer case when the two were in Providence. Mr. Slade insisted that Mr. Peckham had admitted that this conversation occurred in November, prior to the time when, according to Mr. Osborne's disputed testimony, he received the first letter from Rae Tanzer.

Declares Oliver Is a Myth.

"I've heard many stories as a lawyer," he said, "but never the equal of this. I've no doubt that a man did go to Mr. Osborne's home. Give Mr. Osborne credit where he deserves it. It was a manly thing for him to attempt to cover up his dirty work in the presence of his wife; but Oliver Osborne never in fact existed except for the purpose of clearing James W. Osborne before his wife, and to throw mud into the eyes of the community. James W. Osborne, with all of the power and all of the influence he possesses, has not been able to produce the mythical Oliver. And the Federal Government has been unable to produce him—because he doesn't exist. Gentlemen of the jury, when you go into the room to deliberate on this case, ask yourselves, 'Where is Oliver Osborne?'"

Mr. Marshall in his summing up said that the first "startling thing" was that James W. Osborne had met a girl on the street one day and promised to marry her the next, according to the defense. He called attention to the fact that Rae Tanzer had "run around with Oliver" while she was sending letters to James W. Osborne, and that she had admitted she never had mentioned the letters in conversation with her companion. Finally, he said, Slade & Slade found themselves "in a desperate fix" and saw that "evidence must be got" to support their case, which they had thought Mr. Osborne would not fight.

Mr. Marshall made a point of the close tab David Slade kept on Safford, and he reminded the jury that when Safford was found he had 21 cents in his pocket and was working for his board and lodging, and that, therefore, the small amounts of money given him by Slade were big to him. Furthermore, Mr. Marshall said, in his opinion, Slade had promised Safford money after the Tanzer case was finished. This was indicated, Mr. Marshall said, in the fact that Safford ran up a taxicab bill of $15.

"I tell you, gentlemen of the jury, if David and Maxwell Slade had gotten away with this case against Mr. Osborne they would have gotten rich, they would have risen to the top of the blackmail bar. Men would have been afraid to fight them in the courts. Every threatening letter they sent out would have been answered by a check. What do you think of this blackmail business, gentlemen? You have had it laid out before you. What do you think of it? How would you like to have any of this class of lawyers and this class of women get after you? And if you don't do justice in this case you will give such lawyers and such women opportunity to ply their trade."

GIRL REPUDIATES PARENTS.

Scorns Mother, with Whom She Has Not Lived Since 1906.

Mary Conley, 13 years old, who lives with Joseph Monte and his wife in East Thirteenth Street, near Fifth Avenue, Bayonne, told Vice Chancellor Lewis in the Jersey City Chancery Court yesterday that she did not want to have anything to do with her parents, Joseph and Rose Conley of 28 Porter Street, Jersey City. They had domestic trouble in 1906 and found homes with other persons for their six children. Mrs. Conley brought a suit for the recovery of the custody of the daughter Mary, which was before the Court today.

She testified she had succeeded in getting back all of her children except Mary.

"Do you know your father and mother?" the Vice Chancellor asked.

"Yes, I live with them."

"No, I mean your own father and mother?"

"You mean those people?" with a scornful glance at her parents. "Yes, I know them and I don't want to have anything to do with them."

"That baby is mine," said Mrs. Conley," and I want her. I suffered for her. This other woman never did. She doesn't know a mother's love."

The Vice Chancellor said he would look into the case thoroughly.

Man Loses Wife, Brother-in-Law, and Sister-in-Law.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, May 4.—When Harry Van Sickel of this city steped off a train at Bound Brook this morning, bringing the body of his wife who died suddenly in Toronto, Canada, on Friday, he was met by his relatives, who informed him that his brother-in-law, William Caldwell, of Trenton, and his sister-in-law, Mrs. Percy Campbell, of Toronto, had died yesterday morning within an hour of each other.

Mr. Van Sickel's wife, who was formerly Miss Rachel Caldwell of this city, and a daughter of John Coldwell of York, Penn., was called to Toronto last weke by the illness of her sister and left here apparently in the best of health. The changed appearance of her sister was such a shock that it caused convulsions, of which she died.

Meantime William Caldwell lay dying in a Trenton hospital, vainly begging the nurses to bring his favorite sister Rachel to his side. He expired without knowing his sister had died.

John Caldwell of York, Penn., lies very ill, and the effect of the three deaths on him is feared.

But Passaic School Girls Only Get as Far as Newark.

PASSAIC, N. J., May 4.—Dorothy Wallace and Phillipina Schoch, the schoolgirls who disappeared from their homes here Saturday and were found in Newark, returned home today in company with officers of Passaic, who went for them.

Chief of Police Long of Newark, who found the runaways in a furnished room house at 11 Wood Street kept by Mrs. Charlotte Bergmann, an aged midwife, said, after his interrogation of the girls, he was satisfied that no one lse was involved in their leaving home, and that they had suffered no maltreatment.

The story the girls told the Chief was that they had about $6 between them. Part of the money they had saved and part they took from their parents. They went to Newark with the intention of traveling to Arizona, where they knew a woman who formerly lived in Passaic, but found that their money was insufficient to take them any distance, so, after spending a night in the woods back of Pleasantville, they obtained a room at Mrs Bergman's.

LINCOLN DEFENDS TIPPING OF PORTERS

TOTALS $2,340,000 A YEAR

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 4.—Robert Tod Lincoln, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Pullman Car Company, Vice President of that organization, and son of Abraham Lincoln, declared as a witness today before the Federal Commission on Industrial Relations that the Pullman Company, in employing 6,500 colored car porters, had been one of the greatest benefactors of the age and had secured to the negro race its greatest advance in honest labor. To questions he admitted that the wages of the Pullman porter were $27.50 a month and the public was relied on to make up, in tips, the rest of a living wage. Mr. Lincoln said that the dividends paid by the Pullman Company last year amounted to $161,000,000, and to Commissioner Garretson, who bore a more striking resemblance to President Lincoln than the son, he agreed that the company was willing to "capitalize the good nature of the traveling public" that paid these tips.

There was a large attendance at the hearing. To old Washingtonians, Mr. Lincoln, as a young man during the war and later as Secretary of War, had been a familiar and popular figure. He had changed greatly in appearance, and some of those who had known him thirty years ago did not recognize him today. Mr. Lincoln has been living in Washington for several years.

Mr. Lincoln said that the Pullman Company employed from 2,00 0to 2,500 conductors and from 6,000 to 6,500 porters. There were 45 district Superintendents, and these places were filled up from the ranks of the conductors, so that there was little promotion in the service, and for the colored porter it was a "blind alley" job.

Frank P. Walsh, the Chairman of the commission, asked Mr. Lincoln if it was true that the employes had made complaints of their condition and treatment and that their petitions never reached the Board of Directors. Mr. Lincoln said he thought "it would be rather hard to get the board together for such a purpose."

"One witness, a porter on the Pennsylvania Railroad," said Mr. Walsh, "testified that, in addition to his monthly pay of $27.50, he averaged $87.50 a month in tps, his run being from New York to Chicago, which is a very good one. Would you or any self-respecting member of your Board of Directors be willing to take your pay in the same way, Mr. Lincoln?"

"No, no," came the reply, "and I must say that this arrangement of tips is not a nice one at all. But it is an old custom," added the witness with a chuckle, "and one to which the colored race is accustomed. The public seems to be fond of it. The little services a porter can do—brush your colthes, see that your dinner is served, or run and get a newspaper—such things seem to justify the tip."

"Do you know that there is a widespread criticism of your company on account of it?" asked Mr. Walsh.

"No, I never heard of such a suggestion," replied Mr. Lincoln.

"Have you considered abolishing it and paying your employes a fair living wage?"

"Oh, no; it would never do to abolish the tipping system," said the witness.

"Is it for reasons of economy that it would not do?"

"Oh, it wouldn't bother us at all in that way," said Mr. Lincoln, "but I fancy that it would bother the porters some."

A number of questions as to the propensity for losing linen and the system of penalties to restrain this loss followed. Mr. Lincoln said that two-thirds of the whole number of employes of the company were paid the good service bonus last year, so that not many could have been punished for loss of linen. The fines for linen lost amounted to $60,000 last year, but the actual losses were far greater than that. Men were not fined a m onth's salary for their delinquincies and no men had been discharged, as had been reported, for trying to organize in unions. The fact that for many years conductors and porters had been required to obtain uniforms from Marshall Field & Co. was discussed, but Mr. Lincoln could not agree that the presence of Chauncey Keep, trustee of the Marshall Field estate on the board of the Pullman Company, had anything to do with this circumstance.

Mr. Lincoln described the relief association maintained by the employes, and said that the Pullman Company underwrote the mutual assessment plan of death payments. The company had no direct plan for relief of employes in sickness or in case of accident.

It was explained by Solicitor Daniels of the Pullman Company that where a Pullman employe was hurt in a railroad accident, a suit at law against the course pursued. He told of a Pullman employe who got a judgment against the Pennsylvania Railroad recently for $14.00 for injury in an accident.

"And we had to pay the judgment," added Mr. Daniels.

This produced a general laugh. It was then explained that the Pullman Company was forced by many of its contracts to carry all such judgments for injury by accidents.

"The strong roads," further explained Mr. Daniels, "compel us to do this and the weak ones can't."

Pressed for a nopinion as to whether a Federal Employers' Liability act would be a good thing, Mr. Daniels begged to be excused. Mr. Lincoln said that he "would start out in a friendly way toward that proposition."

Mr. Garretson, when his turn came to question Mr. Lincoln, pursued an aggressive line of inquiry.

"One of your employes who had been with you twenty-three years and was getting $28.40 a month told us he was compelled to accept tips to live and support his family. Isn't the Pullman Company really making the public pay the wages of your employes?"

"As a mathematical proposition it amounts to that," said Mr. Lincoln.

"You are capitalizing the tipping system?"

"The tips would be paid anyhow."

"But you believe the corporation should get the benefit of them rather than the coon?"

"I don't say that."

"The tips add a couple of millions to the pay of your employes every year?"

"About $30 a month for 6,500 employes."

"That would be $2,340,000; would it make any difference in your dividends if tips should be abolished?"

"Not a bit."

"Doesn't your system amount to practically the same thing as that existing on the railroads of a part of the country before 1863, when the workmen were the property of the railroad companies—were owned in fee?"

To this Mr. Lincoln showed some hesitation, and finally made answer simply by a chckle.

Commissioner O'Connell asked if the witness would explain to the commission the underlying causes of unrest among working people, but Mr. Lincoln begged to be excused.

The general conditions complained of by employes on the Pennsylvania Railroad were described by H. P. Perham, President of the Order of Railway Telegraphers at considerable length. He sai dthat the employes were compelled to join a voluntary relief association, and in doing so signed an agreement to forfeit all their accumulations of premiums if they went out of the service of the company. Last year, he said, 4,141 employes, who had thus paid $3,707,080, left the employ of the company and lost all they had paid in.

Under the conditions of the work the employes did not usually live long enough to get the benefits of the retirement funds, he said. The statistics showed that there was a great amount of insanity which resulted from the work of signal men on railroads because of the responsibility and strain. The alleged abuse of the police system on the Pennsylvania was also discussed, and it was charged that armed men had intimidated employes on several occasions where there had been disputes and strikes.

Employes, Mr. Perham said, were told how to vote, forbidden to visit the Capitol at Harrisburg when legislation affecting them was under consideration, and bankers and newspapers had been made to bend to the will of the railroad company to keep the employes in subjection.

Newark Worker Accused of Abandoning Baby Five Weeks Old.

Following the finding of a five weeks' old baby boy in Elizabeth, N. J., Monday night, John F. Fitzsimmons of 74 Peshine Avenue, Newark, was arrested yesterday on a charge of abandoning the infant.

Fitzsimmons's undoing was due to Mrs. William Pitman, 28 College Place, Newark, who had been taking care of the baby for about three weeks. He had called at the Pitman home early Monday night and said he was going to take the child to its mother in Jersey City. Mrs. Pitman wrote a note and pinned it under the child's clothing. It read:

If anything happens to this child, notify Mrs. William Pitman, 28 College Place, Newark, N. J.

When the child was found in a hammock on the front porch of a house in Clover Street, Elizabeth, the note was discovered. Fitzsimmons was found in a factory in which he was working. The mother of the child is said to be working in a restaurant in Manhattan. Fitzsimmons had been paying Mrs. Pitman $2 a week for the care of the child.

SAFFORD GUILTY, LAWYERS IN FIGHT

BLOW FOR BENJAMIN SLADE

ASK LENITY FOR DEFENDANT

Jurors Take Eight Hours to Convict Man Who Identified James W. Osborne as "Oliver."

Franklin D. Safford, the hotel clerk charged with having committed perjury in his identification of James W. Osborne as Rae Tanzer's companion, was convicted last night by a jury in the Federal District Court.

The court had just adjourned after the announcing of the conviction when the spectators were startled by an altercation at the door between Roger B. Wood, Assistant United States District Attorney, and Benjamin Slade, counsel for Safford, and broher of David and Maxwell Slade, who are under indictment for paying Safford to perjure himself.

Many persons witnessed the encounter between Mr. Wood and Mr. Slade, and according to some of those who expressed themselves Mr. Wood struck Mr. Slade in the ye after Mr. Slade had made an insinuating remark to him. Mr. Slade, according to witnesses, attempted to hit back, and for a moment the two men, both of whom are of small stature, pushed and struck at each other; but they were too far apart to land their blows. Bystanders uickly separated them.

Jurors Also in a Row.

In the excitement following the altercation some one told Mr. Wood that friends of the defense were trying to intimidate juror No. 3, Joseph Cassel. Mr. Wood called to a Deputy Marshal to protect the juror, and Mr. Cassel after a moment was led from a crowd around him and taken into the District Attorney's office.

While the throng in the corridors were still excited, loud talking was heard in a corner, and one of the jurors suddenly exclaimed to Harry J. Kendrigen, the foreman of the jury, that he would "knock his face in." Spectators and deputy marshals quickly intervened, and what looked like another fight was prevented. Finally the Federal Building was cleared by the officers of the court, and quiet was restored.

The jury reached its verdict after eight hours and twelve minutes deliberation. When called into court at 10:30 the foreman said:

"We find the defendant guilty and recommend him to the mercy of the court and ask that he be dealt with leniently."

Slade vs. Wood.

The formalities following this statement were ended in a minute or two, and Judge Hough announced the adjournment of court. The jurymen, Mr. Wood, Assistant District Attorney Hershenstein, the three Slade brothers, and the thirty or forty other persons began to file out of the court rom.

Benjamin Slade was in the door with one foot in the corridor outside when he turned and saw Mr. Wood apparently talking to one of the jurors. He smiled and, according to many witnesses, said:

"Get out!" shouted Mr. Wood, and as Mr. Slade did not move he turned, presumably looking for a Deputy Marshal, and said, "Put him out!"

Mr. Slade retorted that he did not have to get out. Mr. Wood again called upon some one to put his opponent out, the two men drew closer together, the crowd in the courtroom packed around, and the next moment fists were seen flying through the air.

The nearest spectators seized the would-be combatants, and some pushed Mr. Slade out into the corridor while others dragged Mr. Wood back into the courtroom. The men made several efforts to reach each other, but desisted when they saw the increasing number of persons between them.

Judge To Investigate.

David Slade, who witnessed the mix-up, first tried to reach his brother's side, then aparently Mr. Wood, but finally began running down the corridor shouting, "Where is the Judge?"

Judge Hough had just stepped out of the door leading to his chambers and waited for him. Standing in the corridor, David Slade, and Benjamin, who joined him, lodged complaint against Mr. Wood, saying that he had committed assault in the court room. Judge Hough said that he would not take the matter up at that time of the night, but that he would investigate it this morning.

As the Judge turned to go, the Slade brothers, Maxwell having joined them, began turning this way and that seeking witnesses. There was a crowd around them, among whom were several jurors, and David Slade asked Mr. Cassel for his name as a witness. Mr. Cassel refused to give his name, saying that he wanted nothing to do with the disturbance.

While this was going on, Mr. Wood, Mr. Hershenstein, and other persons were some fifty feet away in the corridor. Suddenly some one ran from the Slade centre to the Wood centre, shouting that "they" were trying to intimidate the juror Cassel. Mr. Wood sprang to action.

"Get that juror," he said. "Tell a Marshal to protect that juror."

Mr. Cassel soon appeared accompanied by a deputy marshal. The whole crowd moved down the corridor toward the front of the Federal building. There was a stop at the front elevatotrs, the men in their excitement forgetting that the elevators were not running. While there was waiting and much exclaiming of contradictory statements, the foreman and another juror were heard in altercatioon.

There was further crowding, a separating of the two men, and orders were shouted to the marshals to clear the building. This was soon done, all being made to walk from the third floor, where the incidents occurred, to the street, only Mr. Cassel and the forman

COUNT CZAKY ORDERED BY WIFE TO SEEK JOB

His Friends Say He Has One and When He "Makes Good" the Countess Will Welcome Him.

Count Kalman de Czaky Koroszejh and Adorjan, nephew of the Archbishop of Vienna, hereditary Governor of a Hungarian province, and a distant cousin of Count Szechenyi, who married Miss Gladys Vanderbilt, has taken the dictum of his American wife, the former Mrs. Maud Howard Bryan, and has returned to New York after an absence of several years to try and earn a living just like an ordinary American husband.

According to the story which has followed him here from San Francisco, the Count has come here with instructions to "make good." There is no intention on either side to remain permanently separated, much less seek a divorce, it is said. It is merely a mutual agreement that in America it is not fitting that a man should live on his wife's income, a story from San Francisco States.

The Count himself has adopted the motto of silence. Few of his former friends knew of his arrival, and the fact that he was living in modest quarters in a boarding house at 166 West Seventy-third Street was a surprise to many who knew him during the months of his courtship of Mrs. Bryan in 1908, when he occupied an expensive suite at the Hotel Netherland.

At the boarding house yesterday all attempts to find the Count wereu nsuccessful. It was said that he made it a rule not to see callers and would not discuss his affairs or the work he was doing. That he had accejted his wife's challenge and had gone to work in earnest seemed evident from the fact that since his arrival he had made it a habit to leave the house punctually at 8 A. M. and didn't return until dinner time—sometimes much later than that, the maid said.

The boarding-house folk professed to be in the dark as to the kind of work he was doing. If he had an office they didn't know where it was. The best they could do was to assure inquirers that Count Czaky was kept very busy "downtown."

According to the story from San Francisco, not even the Countess knows what his work here is. It is said that she has not heard from the Count from the moment he packed up and left. But she is confident that he is making an earnest effort, and she has expressed the hope that he will make good. It is on tat condition alone that she will permit him to return, she insists.

The Count and Mrs. Bryan were married here in 1908, but they kept it a secret until the following year. They had met at a musicale given by Mrs. Roswell Hitchcock at the Waldorf-Astoria, and, as the Count later confessed, he fell in love with her at first sight. Mrs. Bryan had been left a considerable fortune by the death of her first husband, Montgomery Bryan, a wealthy publisher of San Fransisco. At the time the Count was also reported to be wealthq. He, too, had been married before. His first wife was Marianne, daughter of Herr Walgang von Szell, President of the Senate of Hungary. There was a divorce and she married Jan Kubelik, the violinist.

MME. FLORIAN BADLY HURT.

Mme. Agnes Florian, a well known Brooklyn church singer, who in private life is Mrs. Francis B. Mullin, wife of a lawyer, with offices at 132 State Street, was seriously injured on Monday night at the Bedford Riding Academy. She is under the care of physicians at her home at 190 State Street, and is said to be in great pain from injuries to her chest. It is said the physicians have been unable to learn whether any bones were broken.

According to Miss June Mullin, the singer's daughter, Mme Florian went on Monday night to the riding academy to take her fifth lesson. The horse which she had ridden on her previous visits was already in use, so Mme. Florian got another mount which seemed to be rather frisky. Two men led it out, and Mme. Florian, after some hesitation, mounted it. No sooner had the attendants let go than the horse began to cavort, and the rider was compelled to throw her arms about its neck to hold on. After a moment or two it pranced over to the high railing at the side of the riding floor and dashed against it, Mme. Florian striking her chest violently against the wall. She fell to the ground unconscious and was picked up by attendants, who sent her home in a taxicab.

At the Bedford Riding Academy no one would admit that an accident had occurred, but Mr. Mullin confirmed his daughter's story. The Florian Glee Club, an institution of which Mme. Florian was the head, was to give a concert at the Hotel Bossert on May 21, but the event was indefinitely postponed on account of the injury.

MITCHEL ON BEAR HUNT.

Mayor, with Wife and Two Friends, Arrives in Wyoming.

Special to The New York Times.

It is Mayor Mitchel's first trip west of the Mississippi River. He expressed himself as much impressed with the broad expanse of the prairie country and the magnitude of the Rockies. Although it was Mr. Mitchel's first experience in a Western town, little interested him except the thought of getting on the trail of a bruin, and all he desired to talk about was bear. He comes with the reputation of being an excellent rifle shot, and the assurances he received that undoubtedly he would bag a bear seemed to please him.

$500,000 GIFT TO CHURCH.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—It was made known today by Bishop Harding of the Diocese of Washington at the opening of the twentieth annual diocesan convention that the donor of $500,000 for building the sanctuary of the Episcopal Cathedral of Saint Peter and Saint Paul in this city was Mrs. Archibald D. Russell of New York.

She is the Chairman of the Cathedral Committee of the State of New York.

BRITISH SHIPS TO LEAVE.

Will Withdraw So as Not to Interfere with Our Fleet's Manoeuvres.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—British warships, which have been laying off the New York and New England coasts, will be temporarily withdrawn so that they may not interfere with the success of the manœuvers of the Atlantic fleet, which begin May 18.

Notice to that effect has been communicated to the Navy Department by the British Ambassador here.

BARNES ON BOSSES, AS TOLD BY COLONEL

COULDN'T TRUST 'RIFF-RAFF'

Barnes Told Him Parties Should Combine to Beat Direct Primaries—More Today.

WASTE IN STATE PRINTING

Hotchkiss Tells How Efforts to Stop It Were Blocked—Light on Commissions to Barnes.

Special to The New York Times.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 5.—Theodore Roosevelt went back on the witness stand in the Supreme Court here this afternoon and for half an hour galvanized into new life the Barnes-Roosevelt libel trial by relating conversations he had with William Barnes regarding boss rule and machine government. Gesticulating and clicking his teeth, he told with gusto how Barnes had preached the doctrine of machine domination, and had vaunted his distrust of the ability of the people to rule themselves. Much of what he said was repitition, but the Colonel slipped in new and characteristic phrases here and there to add to the smudges he already had given to his enemy.

The reappearance of Mr. Roosevelt, allowed under the new ruling of Justice William S. Andrews, that he might tell of conversations on subjects not mentioned in his pleadings in order to show what effect they might have had upon his mind at the time he wrote the alleged libelous article, came at the close of a day that had been spent by his counsel, John M. Bowers, in driving home testimony to show how closely Barnes was connected with Albany printing contracts and how largely he had profited by that connection. Mr. Bowers was able to show that Mr. Barnes's publication, The Albany Journal, received commissions amounting to thousands of dollars for work that had been turned over by it to the J. B. Lyon Company, in which Mr. Barnes also was financially interested. Coupled with the fact that already it had been put in evidence that Barnes exerted influence to get the State printing contracts for the Lyon company, and that he fought against the establishment of a State printing plant, or any other concern that would break in upon his alleged printing monopoly. The new testimony was considered by the Roosevelt forces to be highly damaging to Mr. Barnes.

Reports Stored in Capitol Attic.

As another link in their contention that Barnes was in an alliance between crooked business and crooked politics the Roosevelt counsel also brought out through William H. Hotchkiss, State Superintendent of Insurance under Governor Hughes, the fact that thousands of useless copies of insurance reports had been printed, only to be stored in the attic of the State Capitol, and that when Mr. Hotchkiss tried to get the law changed so as o cut off the extravagance his bills were held up by Democratic and Republican legislators. The Roosevelt counsel openly charged that Barnes was responsible for the useless printing and for the fate of the bills.

There was one expected sensation that did not materialize. Some 350 letters that passed between Thomas C. Platt and Theodore Roosevelt from 1899 to 1909, which Mr. Platt's son, Edward T. Platt, brought here, were not put into evidence or read. They were sbpoenaed by William M. Ivins, senior counsel for Mr. Barnes, but the lawyer decided to withhold them, inasmuch as they covered matters already brought out in other Platt-Roosevelt correspondence. Justice Andrews, however, ordered that they be kept here, so that they might be available in case they were needed at any future time.

Will Shorten Day's Sessions.

Because of the severe strain the counsel, jurymen, witnesses and others connected with the trial are undergoing, Justice Andrews decided today not to hold afternoon sessions hereafter later than 4 o'clock. The usual adjourning time for the day has been an hour later. The counsel, especially, have felt the strain of the trial owing to the fact that after the court day is over they must stay up late at night preparing for the next day's proceedings. Justice Andrews likewise spends much of the time evenings going over the testimony and getting ready for his charge. Mr. Ivins took an afternoon off today and went automobiling to rest up. He said he had not expected that Colonel Roosevelt would be called to the stand.

The appearance today of a dozen new witnesses served as a reminder that the trial, although in the middle of its third week, might not be concluded for two or three weeks more. The most important of these witnesses was ex-Governor Benjamin B. Odell, Jr., who arrived this afternoon. He is to be a witness for Mr. Barnes, and his appearance on the stand is looked forward to with high interest, as he was Chairman of the Republican State Committee that ran Colonel Roosevelt's campaign for Governor in 1898. Few other men, if any, know more about the relations that existed between Mr. Roosevelt and Senator Platt.

Others here waiting to be called or who are under subpoena and ready to respond to a summons by wire are Otto Kelsey, who succeeded Francis Hendricks as State Superintendent of Insurance; Louis F. Payn, who was practically thrown out of that office by Governor Roosevelt; J. Matthew Wainwright, the Republican member of the Bayne Senate Investigating Committee of 1911; Senator Bayne, Senator Henry M. Sage of Alabny County, Thaddeus C. Sweet, the present Speaker of the Assemly; John W. Hutchinson, who was active in the Senatorial deadlock of 1911, and who managed United States Senator Wadsworth's campaign last year; Senator J. Henry Walters of Syracuse, Ray B. Smith, ex-Clerk of the Assembly; Tammany Senator Robert F. Wagner and Alfred E. Smith, minority leader of the present Assembly. Ex-Goveronr Martin H. Glynn is also expected to testify.

Roosevelt Eager to Resume.

Colonel Roosevelt was recalled to the stand shortly before 4 o'clock. He had been fidgeting for two days to get back into the witness chair, and when his name was called by Mr. Bowers he went quickly to the stand. Mr. Ivins was absent from the courtroom during the afternoon, and William L. Barnum, the Syracuse lawyer for Mr. Barnes, stepped into the breach for him.

In calling the Colonel Mr. Bowers explained that he wanted, in mitigation and justification, to have him tell of

HUERTA WILL MAKE FUTURE HOME HERE

Leases a House on Long Island, and Family Will Leave Spain at Once for New York.

HAS THIRTY-ODD MEMBERS

Ex-President of Mexico Says He Is in Love with This City and Declares It the Finest.

General Victoriano Huerta, recently President of Mexico, who for the last month has been living at the Hotel Ansonia, Broadway and Seventy-third Street, announced last night that he had decided to make New York his home. He said Mrs. Huerta and their children and grandchildren to the number of thirty, all of whom are now in Spain, would sail immediately for New York and should arrive here about the middle of the present month.

As soon as Mrs. Huerta arrives the whole family will move into a spacious mansion that General Huerta has leased in Forrest Hill, L. I. Three of hte five daughters and two of the three sons are married, and all are in the party that is about to leave Spain.

Abraham Z. Ratner, General Huerta's financial adviser, intimate friend and interpreter, said last night that the General had fallen in love with New York. He thinks it the finest city in the world, and the suburbs, in his opinion, equal those of any city he has ever visited. It was during an automobile tour of Long Island that he made up his mind to bring his family over and settle there. He also thinks Westchester a very desirable residential section, but he likes Long Island better.

Needs Very Large House.

General Huerta, it was said, experienced much difficulty in geting a home to suit him. This was not because there was a lack of houses that he could have leased, but because of the trouble in finding a house big enough to accommodate the whole Huerta family and the many visitors General Huerta expects to entertain. As soon as he is comfortably settled in Forrest Hills, General Huerta expects to make many motor trips to New York.

After announcing the General's decisio nto live on Long Island, Mr. Ratner said that more than 400 Mexican Army officers had called on General Huerta at hi sapartments in the Ansonia within the last four weeks.

"These officers," said Mr. Ratner, "among whom are some of the best known of the old-time military leaders of Mexico, did not call on General Huerta with any revolutionary ideas or plans in their heads. Reports to the contrary would be unjust to General Huerta, for the simple reason that they would be untrue. General Huerta makes this announcement because he has heard that in certain quarters the visits of these old military men have been given an entirely wrong meaning.

"General Huerta was the highest ranking officer of the Mexican army, and these men were his loyal subordinates and friends. When General Huerta came to New York they considered it their duty to pay their respects to their old Commander, and for this reason they called on him. It was simply a wholesome desire to shake the hand of General Huerta and say as the Americans put it, 'howdy do.'"

Mexican Military Men Call.

"Four hundred officers are a great many," Mr. Ratner was told.

"Yes, that's true," he answered, "but that's the number just the same."

"And they all came for the simple purpose of paying their respects?"

"Yes, that was all, just to salute and say 'hello.'"

One of the officers who called on General Huerta was a veteran of Porfirio Diaz's campaign, Lieut. Gen. Bravo, in point of age, said to be the oldest officer in the Mexican Army as it existed under Diaz and Huerta. General Bravo is about 81 years old, and was Military Commandant of Mexico City during a part of the Huerta régime. He was one of Diaz's most trusted Lieutenants, and was known as "the Diaz pacifier." Mr. Ratner said that he was so known because he suppressed a number of revolutions before they got well under way. One of his most noted accomplishments was the suppression during the Diaz Presidency of a Yaqui Indian uprising in Yucatan.

Orozco in New York.

Another of General Huertas callers was Pasquale Orozco, the man who, next to Madero, was most prominent in the revolutionary movement that ended in sending Porfirio Diaz into exile and in elevating Madero to the Presidency. Within a few months after Madero assumed the Presidency Orozco turned against him and became a bitter enemy. On many occasions in recent months it has been reported by Carrancistas and Villistas that Orozco had been seen in New York, but last night's announcement was the first positive confirmation of the report. Orozco, who prior to the Madero revolution was a poor shipping clerk in Chihuahua, is perhaps the most bitter of all the enemies of Pancho Villa. General Caus, former Governor of Vera Cruz, an ex-Governor of Yucatan, and General Olea, one of Huerta's most trusted lieutenants, were among those who, it was admitted last night, had called recently to pay their respects to General Huerta.

It was said last night that General Huerta, when he gets his family settled, might run down to Washington on a sightseeing trip.

TUMULTY'S BUSY BIRTHDAY.

Starts It by Paying a $5 Fine for His Chauffeur.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—Joseph P. Tumulty, Secretary to the President of the United States, was thirty-six years of age today. It was the busiest birthday in Mr. Tumulty's fairly long experience. He got up early to go to the police court, where he gave testimony in behalf of his chauffeur, who was accused of speeding, and paid the $5 fine imposed.

Then he went to the White House, where, after reading a birthday letter from President Wilson, full of expressions of appreciation and affection, he did a half-day's work, received many friends who came with floral tributes and to offer their congratulations, after which he rushed off to an afternoon train to go to Jersey City, where the real celebration of his birthday is to take place tonight. Jersey City is Mr. Tumulty's old home.

CHINESE IN DREAD AS JAPAN PREPARES

Diplomatic Exchanges Go On, but Japanese Send Warships and Set Up Guns at Tsinan.

ULTIMATUM NOT YET SENT

Report That United States Is to Mediate Also Discredited—Important Meeting Today.

PEKING, May 5.—The Third Secretary of the Japanese Legation today visited Tsao Yulin, the Vice Minister of Foreign Affairs, and intimated that the legation might still be able to prevent hostilities. He asked whether China's reply of May 1 to the Japanese demands was final.

Tsao Yulin said that he had no instructions beyond that reply, but after the visit of the Japanese Secretary had ended Tsao Yulin repaired to the Winter Palace, where he saw President Yuan Shih-kai. Leaving the Winter Palace Tsao Yulin visited the Japanese Legation.

Dispatches received here from Tsinan, 230 miles south of Peking, in the Province of Shantung, report that Japanese troops have mounted nine cannon in the suburbs of that city. The Chinese troops, obeying a general order from Peking, did not interfere.

A Japanese cruiser and four torpedo-boat destroyers have arrived at Chinwang-tao, on the Gulf of Liao-tung, about 150 miles east of Peking, evidently for the purpose of removing from China the members of the Japanese Legation.

Consular reports from all parts of the country announce the departure of Japanese, or their concentration at the Japanese Consulates.

There is a substantial opinion in Peking that Japan may take action in regard to the non-acceptance of her demands by China without waiting upon the issuance of an ultimatum.

Peking Remains Quiet.

The Chinese capital is remarkably quiet in the face of what the Peking Gazette calls "the gravest peril in China's modern history." Most of the people of the city are going about their business as usual, apparently with no knowledge of the problem which confronts their country. They might easily be aroused, but the Government has taken every measure to prevent anti-Japanese demonstrations.

Only the educated upper classes are kept informed of the progress of negotiations with Japan. Among them the feeling is intense but there have been no demonstrations, although reports have been received from southern cities that several men and one woman have committed suicide, declaring "they did not wish to lives to see China subjected."

After the news was received yesterday of Japan's proposed ultimatum, a Cabinet council was held at the Winter Palace, the residence of President Yuan Shi-kai. The Ministers were divided in opinion. The President asked questions but did not express his own views. Some officials express the belief that China will surrender, while others are of the opinion that she will offer all the resistance possible to Japan's demands. The decision will rest with Yuan Shi-kai.

Report of U. S. Mediation.

TOKIO, May 5.—The deliberations between the Japanese officials concerning the situation between Japan and China continue. The Emperor will preside tomorrow at a Cabinet Council. No official announcement was forthcoming today concerning the situation.

A big fleet of warships is taking on supplies at Sasebo. The Japanese in the Province of Shantung are concentrating at Tsing-Tao, and those in Manchuria are preparing to take refuge in the railway zone.

The Kokumin in its issue today says it learns from an authoritative source that the United States is to mediate between Japan and China, and that this is one reason why the Cabinet deliberations have been protracted.

All Japan has focused its attnetion on the Chinese situation, which is believed to be full of historic possibilities. It is reported that the Foreign Office has sent telegrams to all Consuls in China instructing them to prepare their nationals for possible departure. Japanese at Mukden have been asked to hold themselves in readiness to withdraw to places near the South Manchurian railroad.

Lieut. Gen. Count Terauchi, Governor General of Kirea, has held a conference with the General Staff of the army.

The decisions of the Cabinet and Elder Statesmen are expected tomorrow. The press says forty-eight hours will be the limit of the proposed ultimatum. Newspapers characterize as insulting the insistence of China that Japan's offer to restore Kiaochow be reduced to writing.

HANKOW, May 4.—The Japanese Consul General received instructions from Tokio today directing him to order Japanese women and children to be prepared to leave Hankow for Japan by tomorrow's steamer.

TIME LIMIT OF 48 HOURS.

LONDON, May 5.—"A Japanese ultimatum to China," cables the Tokio correspondent of the Central News, "grants a delay of forty-eight hours."

Neither the Japanese Embassy nor the Chinese Legation has received any information of the dispatch of an ultimatum to China.

The Japanese Embassy received today a cable message from Tokio giving the reply of China to the Japanese demands. At the embassy it was said that China's reply was considered "decidedly unconciliatory."

GERMANS CREEP ON TOWARDS YPRES

AGAIN MENACE HILL 60

British Admit the Kaiser's Forces Have Won a Footing There, Due to Use of Gas.

FRENCH ADVANCE ON YSER

Push Forward Lines Near Lizerne—Both Sides Gain Ground in the Woevre.

LONDON, May 5.—The German official report issued this afternoon claims a victory over the British to the east of Ypres in Flanders. Field Marshal Sir John French, the British Commander in Chief, has admitted that he was compelled to readjust his lines in the region of Ypres, but the French communication, far from confirming a German victory in Belgium, says that the German attacks were repulsed, and that the Germans, being taken on the flank by French artillery, suffered very severely.

A late report from the British War Office also says that German attacks were repulsed, although the Germans used asphyxiating gases and did get a footing by the use of these fumes on Hill No. 60, southeast of Ypres, which, since the British captured it recently, has been repeatedly attacked.

There has been fighting all along the rest of the western front, in all of which the Germans say they have been successful. hTe French, however, have another story to tell. They insist that their advnnce continues both along the Yser Canal and in the Woevre, where battles have been continuous for weeks. In the latter region, however, they admit that the Germans took some positions in the Ailly wood, near St. Mihiel, and that at the time of issuing the night bulletin the French had recaptured only a part of them.

Gases Help German Attacks.

Following is the text of the British War Office communication:

Fighting is in progress on Hill No. 60, southeast of Ypres, on which the Germans attained a footing this morning under cover of poisonous gases, which were excessively used and were favored by weather conditions.

AA feeble attack, also preceded by an extensive use of poisonous gas, was made east of Ypres and was easily repulsed. Our artillery inflicting severe loss on the enemy.

In the neighborhood of Givenchy, the Germans exploded a mine, and again employed poisonous gas. Four men were poisoned, but otherwise the enemy's efforts in this direction failed completely.

Hot Fighting in the Woevre.

A slight advance in Belgium, the repulse of a German attack in Champagne, and hot fighting between the Meuse and Moselle, in which several trenches changed hands, are items of the French communiqués, which follow:

(Night Report)—In Belgium the day has been calm. On Tuesday night we captured a German trench and pushed our lines forward between Lizerne and Het Sase, of which we are still masters. The enemy made no counter-attack.

In Champagne, to the west of Perthes, an attempt to attack by the Germans was completely checked, and the same thing occurred in the Argonne at Four de Paris.

Some very spirited actions have taken place between the Meuse and the Moselle. At 4 o'clock in the morning the enemy strongly bombarded our positions at Les Eparges and the trench of Calonne. About 10 o'clock he attacked at the latter point, but his check was complete. Our fire arrested him in front of our first line, which remains intact. The German losses were high, and we made some prisoners.

In the morning, likewise, three regiments, advancing together, attacked the positions recently captured by us near the Ailly Wood, particularly that part to the east of the wood and the open ground of the ridge to the southwest. By this attack they succeeded in gaining a foothold in our first line, but a counter-attack enabled us almost immediately to reoccupy half of the ridge. We have maintained ourselves there, and toward the end of the day we delivered a second counter-attack, the result of which is not yet known. This was for the purpose of retaking the rest of the positions which the Germans had penetrated.

Germans Lose Two Lines of Trenches.

In the Montmare Wood we gained a characteristic success, in carrying two successive lines of German trenches to the east of the positions previously captured by us near the road from Flirey to Essey. We immediately joined these trenches to our own lines, and we have strengthened ourselves there. Three counter-attacks were directed against us in the course of the day, but these were completely repulsed with heavy losses to the enemy in killed and prisoners.

In Alsace, on the north bank of the Fecht River, we continue to gain ground. This morning we took possession of Mamelon, east of Sillakerwaser, (Hill 850.) We have made progress in the direction of the river toward Steinbruck, 90 meters from Metzeral.

(Afternoon Report)—To the north of Ypres the Germans yesterday evening delivered an attack against the left sector of the British front. They were repulsed, and, taken in the flank by the French artillery, they suffered serious losses.

Berlin Reports a British Retreat.

This is the German Army Headquarters' statement:

The British continue their retreat, with heavy losses, in the direction of the bridgehead situated sharply (?) to the east of Ypres. The Van Heule and Eksternest Farms, the castle ground of Herenthage, and the Set Pappotje Farm were taken by us.

Between the Mause and the Moselle there is again great activity in the forest of Le Prêtre, northwest of Pont-a-Mousson, the French attacked esterday with strong forces. Notwithstanding a long preparatory bombardment by artillery, their attack broke down under our fire, with heavy losses to the enemy.

On the other hand, we began attacks in the forest of Ailly and to

BOTHA REPORTS WELLS POISONED BY GERMANS

Says Southwest Africa Commander Told Him He Acted Under Orders.

LONDON, May 5.—In support of charges that the Germans had poisoned wells in the Southwest African campaign, Lewis Harcourt, Secretary of State for the Colonies, tonight issued a communication in which he said that when General Louis Botha, commander of the Union of South Africa forces, occupied Swakopmund he discovered that six wells had been poisoned by an arsenical cattle wash.

As a remonstrance General Botha sent a communication to Colonel Francke, commander of the German forces. This elicited a response, according to the statement of Mr. Harcourt, that the German troops had received orders "if they possibly can prevent it, not to allow any water supplies to fall into the hands of the enemy in a form which allows it to be used for man or beast."

When Swakopmund was evacuated, the reply of Colonel Francke continued, the officer in charge had several bags of cooking salt thrown into the wells, but it was found that this "could in a short time be rendered ineffective." "Thereafter," Colonel Francke's letter said, "we tried the copper dip and found that by using this material any enemy occupying the town would for some time have to rely on water from elsewhere."

The communications say that despite General Botha's protest the practice continued. A message said to have been from Captain Kruger of the German Protectorate troops, intercepted March 22, is quoted in the communication as saying:

"The patrol of Gabib has been instructed thoroughly to infect with disease the Ida Mine. Approach Swakop and the Ida Mine with extreme caution. Do not water there any more."

Since their evacuation of Aus, Warmbad, and other places, General Botha says in a letter, "the German troops have consistently poisoned all wells along the railway line in their retirement."

MUCH DAMAGE DONE BY FRENCH AIRMEN

PARIS, May 5.—An official note was issued tonight giving details of aerial raids by allied aircraft, the information being obtained from the aviators themselves and from prisoners. The note says:

"On March 22 a bombardment of the railway station at Briey took place. Damage was done to Conflans, Briey, and Metz, where provision depots were destroyed and the railway line was cut.

"On April 15 the station at St. Quentin was bombarded and a central depot of munitions, 150 cars, many of them containing benzol, were completely destroyed by fire, which lasted fourteen hours. Explosions wtre heard throughout the night. Twenty-four soldiers were killed.

"On April 28 in a bombardment the Friedrichshafen hangars were damaged and a Zeppelin was destroyed. Bombs were also dropped at Leopoldshöhe and Lorrach, and on the station at Haltingen. Two locomotives and two express trains were disabled and all traffic between Leopoldshöhe and Haltingen was suspended."

TEN TRAWLERS SUNK BY NEW SUBMARINE

German Craft Displaying Iron Cross Causes Havoc—Gives Bread to Fishermen.

LONDON, May 5.—Ten trawlers were destroyed by German submarines on Monday and Tuesday of this week, according to a message received here from Hull. In addition to the Iolanthe, the Hero, and Northward Ho, the victims belonging in Hull include the Hector, Progress, Coquette, and Bob White, while the Rugby and the Uxbridge, owned in Grimsby, met a similar fate. This makes a total of about fifteen of these vessels sunk since Sunday.

So far as is known no lives were lost in these encounters. According to the crews of the fishing vessels, the submarine which wrought this damage is of the newest type. She has an Iron Cross painted on her conning tower. She appeared among the fishing fleet on Monday and sank seven trawlers in quick succession. The crews were allowed to take to their boats, but in some cases the small boats drifted for hours before they were picked up. Each man coming ashore exhibited a huge lump of black bread, given to him by the crew of the submarine which sent his boat down. The English sailors are keeping these pieces of bread as souvenirs.

None of the trawlers surrendered while there was the slightest chance to escape. Generally the fishermen did not take to their boats until bullets or shells were flying about them.

The men say that after they had given in to the Germans they were usually treated kindly by the submarine commanders. In one case the skipper of a trawler was taken on board a submarine and complimented by the commander for having made "a good run of it."

Several trawlers which were challenged by submarines made their escape by putting on a full head of steam and outfooting the Germans.

HULL, England, May 5.—Three more British trawlers have been added to the list of those blown up by German submarines in the North Sea on Monday, and it is feared others also were lost, as they were shelled and fired upon with rifles by the crew of a submersible. The crews of the trawlers Iolanthe, Hero, and Northward Ho have landed here, reporting the destruction of their boats. No lives were lost aboard any of the three.

A Copenhagen dispatch says that while three trawlers were fishing in the North Sea a German submarine appeared and ordered them to stop. The crews then took to their boats and rowed away, after which the trawlers were blown up by boarding parties from the submarine. After rowing about for eight hours the fishermen summoned aid by burning articles of clothing which had been attached to oars.

The trawler Hero attempted to escape, but after an exciting chase, which lasted an hour, the submarine got into close range and opened a fusillade with rifles, whereupon the skipper of the fisherman stopped and the crew took to the small boats.

The trawler Portia has reached Hull after an exciting chase, in which she managed to elude the submarine which was after her.

REPORT RUSSIANS IN FULL RETREAT

Third Line of Defenses in Western Galicia Pierced, According to Berlin.

TOWN OF GORLICE CAPTURED

LOSSES CALLED ENORMOUS

German Cavalry Raid Into Czar's Baltic Provinces Said to Have Been Abandoned.

LONDON, May 5.—Conflicting reports come from the belligerents concerning the fighting in the eastern theatre of the war.

The Austrians and Germans say that the Russians have been badly beaten in Western Galicia and have begun to retire from the Western Carpathians. The Vienna official bulletin asserts that the Russians have been badly beaten along their entire front of ninety-three miles and are in full retreat from the positions they occupied on the Hungarian slopes of the Carpathians after their capture of Dukla Pass.

The Berlin official bulletin says that that the Austro-German Army has pierced the third line of Russian fortifications, and that the town of Galicia has been captured after being destroyed by bombardment.

The Petrograd official version admits that the Russian troops fell back to their second line of fortifications before attacks in massed formation. This statement reads as follows:

An enemy cruiser and other small hostile warships were sighted off Libau today.

In the region of Rossieny (Kovno Province) we are advancing successfully. On the other fronts, as far as the Upper Vistula, there is no change.

In Galicia the fighting between the Vistula and the Carpathians is developing with unvarying stubborness. The Germans have brought up to the fighting line fresh forces of great strength, supported by very numerous artillery. The enemy, following his old tactics of atacking in massed formation, is suffering enormous losses.

Some of our units fell back to the second line of fortifications after desperate fighting.

During the nights of May 2 and 3 in the direction of Stryi the enemy recaptured part of the trenches on Mount Makuvka. The following night we counter-attacked and dislodged the enemy. We captured here over 1,200 prisoners, including thirty officers.

In the region of Angelow, on the Upper Lomnitza, the enemy on May 3 assumed the offensive on a somewhat extensive front, but the movement was barren of results.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, May 5, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—All the German movements in the East now are of immense forces from Cracow, especially southward.

Since Sunday there have been sharp engagements at Tarnow and Gorlice, Galicia, and at Bartfeld, Hungary. The Russian army has driven the Austrians westward from the right bank of the Nida.

A battle, involving enormous numbers, is now beginning. It is believed that General Litzingen's Bavarian army, which last week abandoned its attempt on the Stryi road, is now hastening westward to fill the right wing of the German line.

BEATEN ON 93-MILE FRONT.

VIENNA, May 5, (via London.)—The Austrian War Department today issued an official statement reading as follows:

The Russian front of Zboro-Sztropko-Lupkow, in the Beskid Mountains has become untenable. As the victorious allies are continually advancing from the west toward Jaslow and Zmigrod the enemy on the west Carpathian front started this morning in full retreat from Hungary pursued by the Austro-German troops.

The Russians, therefore, were beaten on a front of 150 kilometres (93 miles) and were forced to retreat with the heaviest losses.

On the remainder of our front the situation is unchanged.

BERLIN, May 5, (via London.)—The following report was issued today by the General Staff:

Attacks from Rossieny, coming from the southeast, were repulsed. The enemy is being pursued at Kalwarya; also northeast of Suwalki and east of Augustowo numerous Russian advances failed. Four hundred Russians in all were taken prisoners.

On the remainder of the front there were a few fights at close quarters, all of which were decided in our favor.

Third Russian Line Pierced.

Southeastern theatre of war:

An attack by the Allied troops north of the wooded Carpathians pierced through the third fortified line of the Russians, who yesterday were defeated along the entire front, retreating toward the Wisloka River. The magnitude of the victory may be seen from the fact that, owing to the piercing by the Allies of the enemy's lines, the Russians are beginning to evacuate threatened positions on their northern flank, in the wooded Carpathians southwest of Dukla.

The rapidity with which our successes have been achieved makes it impossible to give an idea in figures of the booty taken in this victory. According to reports at hand, the number of prisoners taken up to the present amounts to over 30,000.

According to a dispatch received by the Tageblatt from a special correspondent, the southern wing of the Russian army has been broken along a front of twenty-four miles.

"The attack was made with such determination," says the correspondent, "that the Russians were forced to abandon not only their first lines, but also the villages back of the front, which served as quarters. Only in Gorlice did the Russians make a stand. This town was destroyed by an artillery bombardment and a bitter street fight preceded its capture by the Germans.

"All the staff officers of one Russian division were killed or wounded, including several Generals. The majority of

Trying to Stop Panicky Retreat.

The correspondent of the Zeitung am Mittag telegraphs that the situation of the Russians is growing worse hourly, as line after line of German and Austrian troops pushes forward despite opposition. He says that the Russians are endeavoring vainly to bring up reinforcements and halt the panicky retreat of their columns.

The heavy artillery has made the huge battlefield a horrible sight, tearing up the ground, demolishing positions of the Russians and scattering their supplies.

The list of Russian dead, according to this correspondent, is extraordinarily large, while the losses of the Germans are said to have been insignificant. Long lines of prisoners are being put on board trains which are leaving constantly for the interior, as are also the German wounded.

Other dispatches say that Russian prisoners describe the effect of the German and Austrian artillery fire as appalling. The havoc thus wrought was particularly severe at Gorlice, where the Russians fought stubbornly and for four hours endured a terrific fire. In this time, according to these reports, divisions dwindled to regiments and regiments to companies.

The Russian centre was so shaken by the traverses suffered by the two wings that it was compelled to abandon its positions. Thousands of prisoners were made in the centre as well as on the wings.

NORTHERN RAID ABANDONED.

German Cavalry Turns Back, Leaving a Number of Guns.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, May 5, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—The demonstration by the Germans in Northwest Russia doubtless was intended to detain a large Rusian force, available for the battle in progress between Cracok and the Carpathians. This German move has completely failed.

The enemy's cavalry turned back on Monday from a point south of the line Libau-Mitau, abandoning a number of light guns which the Russians have sent to Riga. Neither the German fleet nor transports have been seen off the coast, although the Russian torpedo squadron searched for them.

TAKE SPLINTER FROM HEART

Surgeons Remove Steel Fragment and Soldier Lives.

PARIS, May 5.—A young Sergeant in the French Army, from whose heart a splinter of a hand grenade was extracted by Dr. Beaussenat, chief of the Military Hospital, was presented before the Academy of Medicine last night by Professor Armengaud of Bordeaux. The patient was wounded on Oct. 1 at St. Hubert, when the steel fragment of the grenade penetrated his diaphragm, pericardium, and cardiac muscles, lodging within the right ventricle.

The splinter remained in the ventriole four and a half months before it was extracted. The operation, it was asserted, was unique in the annals of surgery. Much difficulty was experienced in removing the piece of steel as it slipped from the forceps several times. Various complications were feared, but everything went well, and the soldier now is considered cured, as his heart acts normally.

AMERICAN TANKER FREED.

British Release the Pioneer—The Olga's Cotton Sold.

LONDON, May 5.—The Danish steamer Dronnin Olga, from New Orleans April 1, for Gothenburg, has been sent from Kirkwall to Leith, where her cargo of cotton was purchased by the Government. She will be allowed to proceed.

The American oil tanker Pioneer, from New York April 8 for Copenhagen, has been released and permitted to resume her voyage.

ARMED AN AMERICAN SHIP?

Germans Say the British Tried to Put Marines Aboard Her.

BERLIN, May 5, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—Included in the items of news given out today by the Overseas Agency is the following:

"A special dispatch received here from Bremen says the Weserzeitung reports that Captain Duffy of the American sailing vessel Brynhilda, with a cargo of cotton, has arrived at Bremen from New York. The Captain declares that he sailed around Scotland. In the North Sea he was stopped by a British cruiser.

The British commander sent a detail of armed marines and a large quantity of ammunition on board the Brynhilda, declaring that if the sailing ship was stopped by a German submarine the marines would shoot the German Captain and by perforating the tower of the submersible with bullets, make it impossible for it to submerge. Captain Duffy protested, and threatened to touch at a Norwegian port. Finally the British cruiser took him into Aberdeen, whence he was permitted to proceed for Bremen."

DECRIES HERO WORSHIP.

Wounded British Soldier Says It Causes Unfairness.

LONDON, April 15.—A wounded soldier concludes an article in The Express with this prayer:

"Lord, keep us wounded men modest and open our eyes to the purer heroism of those men and women who, denied the brave show of the battlefield, sacrifice themselves day by day to the tedious tasks for which we have not the caurage.

"Am I a hero?" he asks. His answer is, "No, I am not, and the wounded hero stunt has fed me up."

Too much attention spoils the man, and it is, besides, unfair to the comrades in the trenches, says the writer.

BARRING COAL EXPORTS.

England to Allow Shipments Only to Her Colonies and Allies.

LONDON, May 5.—Great Britain is about to prohibit the exportation of coal and coke to all countries abroad other than British possessions and protectorates and allied countries.

A committee will be appointed, however, to consider applications for the export of these fuels to prohibited destinations.

WOOLWICH STRIKE ENDED.

Contractors Agree to Submit the Dispute to Arbitration.

LONDON, May 5.—The strike on the part of 1,800 carpenters and builders at Woolwich Arsenal has come to an end. The contractors have promised to negotiate with the union officials to this end that the questions at issue be arbitrated.

The workmen threw down their tools recently at the Arsenal, where they were building homes for Government employes, demanding an increase in pay amounting to 1 cent an hour.

No Passports Needed in Canada.

In view of the report that passports are required for tourists entering Canada, the Superintendent of Immigration at Ottawa has issued the statement saying: The department is in no way interfering with bona fide tourist traffic. Persons visiting Canada or passing through Canada will receive the same treatment as was customary before the war.

Scene of Operations on the German-Austrian-Russian Front.

In the Russian Baltic Province of Courland, north of the regular battle front, dotted lines and arrows show the direction taken by the German cavalry in the raids toward Libau (1) and Mitau (2). According to special dispatches from Petrograd, this raid has been stopped by the Russians, and the German cavalry is reported to be retreating back to East Prussia, and to have abandoned several light guns in their haste.

In Western Galicia arrows show the direction of the great drive in progress from Cracow, which is said by the Austro-German military authorities to have pierced the Russian lines before Tarnow and at Gorlice. The latter city is reported to have been destroyed by bombardment. Continued success by the Germanic allies at these points, military critics say, would force the Russians to retreat from Hungary through the Dukla Pass and from the whole of their positions in the Western Carpathians.

FINES AND TAXES EMBITTER ANTWERP

Smuggled Letter Reveals a Population Crushed Under German Rule.

ALL TRAVELERS SEARCHED

Men and Women Forced to Disrobe When Making Even a Twenty-five Mile Railway Trip.

A correspondent of the Journal de Geneve, writing from Antwerp in February, gives this picture of conditions under the German domination:

"We cannot carry on any correspondence with foreign countries. Even within the confines of Belgium our letters must be submitted to the German censorship, and many of them never reach their destination because they contain a word that is displeasing to our temporary masters. All correspondence must be unsealed, and it is necessary to give the name and address of the sender.

"If you move from one neighborhood to another a sentry searches you to make sure that you are not the bearer of unauthorized correspondence. If you have the misfortune to be taken in the act you are condemned to serve six weeks in prison and to pay a fine of 100 marks ($25.) This applies to Belgium itself; if you try to pass the frontier—they no longer issue passports for Belgium or any other country, and such an attempt is forbidden under pain of death—or if you are found to be the bearer of foreign correspondence, your case is settled on the spot. If they discover the person who has written the correspondence, he, too, is deported to Germany and condemned to forced labor. Under this régime you may imagine how one arrives at the point of writing merely impersonal things; the essential thing is that your friends or relatives recognize your handwriting when it reaches its destination—if that ever happens. What will be the fate of this letter? Chi lo sa?

(Naturally, no intimation is given of the means by which this particular letter was smuggled out, or of the delays to which it was obviously subject.)

After making a bitter complaint of the "practical joke" which he says the German military administration played upon the inhabitants of Antwerp in the period following the capture of the city, in that it accepted—although under many burdensome restrictions—telegrams addressed to friends and relatives in other cities intended to reassure the recipients as to the senders' safety—telegrams which in many cases were never delivered—the writer says that, after a long period of worse service and higher fares, it was possible at the time of writing to travel between Antwerp and Brussels—a distance of twenty-six miles—fourth class, which is about the same thing as traveling in a freight car in this country, for 1 franc 70 centimes—a little more than 4 cents a mile. All the time tables are in German.

"It is necessary," he continues, "to be at the railway station half an hour before the departure of the train because they search you. You must take off your shoes, stockings, &c. These searches are repeated three or four times in each case. A young woman of my acquaintance had to undress, take down her hair, remove her shoes, stockings, and corset, and three German officers passed their hands over her body to assure themselves that she was not carrying correspondence. Day before yesterday one of my friends was forced to leave the train at Malines, where they searched him and made him remove his underclothes in order to prove that he had no letters on his person. That's what they call 'facilitating travel!'

"We have to be indoors by 8 o'clock at night. After that hour woe be to any one who is found in the streets by the patrols! Five or six days ago I came in at three minutes past eight. The patrol was near the house; I had just time to go in and lock the door. A little later I went to prison for a week and had to pay a fine of 30 marks. ($7.50.)

"The Germans must have money, and they seize every opportunity of raising it; witness the head-tax of twenty-five francs, ($5,) imposed upon bachelors and widowers more than 40 years old. They require us to pay taxes, but they leave us no means of earning a livelihood. On the contrary, everything is monopolized by our visitors.

"The prisons are crowded; they jail us for mere nothings. A Dutchman whom I knew came here two weeks ago, when it was still possible to cross the frontier. He had been charged with four messages for citizens of Antwerp, who were residing abroad. When he arrived at the frontier he showed his messages, all of them harmless, giving only assurances of the writers' safety. On the pretext that he was carrying information that might be of service to the enemy, they handcuffed him and took him before the Kommandatur, where he was sentenced to four days in prison and to pay a fine of thirty marks, ($7.50.) The Dutchman was old and toothless. When they put him in jail they took away his pen-knife. The next morning they brought him a cup of coffee and a crust of the famous war bread, (which we have to crunch while our masters gorge themselves on our good Belgian white bread.) The poor old fellow, deprived of his knife, could eat nothing. At the end of the four days he was released. He wanted to return to his own country, but they had taken away his passport. He had to get a new one, and it cost him eight marks, ($2.)

"Noblesse oblige. We are in a fortified place; so we are subjected to vexations of every kind of which Brussels knows nothing. There, on the other hand, they can have only 200 grammes of war bread per head per day. We are treated like spoiled children, in comparison with the inhabitants of Namur, and particularly those of Liége, where the people are allowed to leave their houses after 6 P. M. There, too, where the population is predominantly Walloon, all proclamations are issued only in German.

"All this reminds me of that pretty and clever cartoon which appeared in Simplicissimus at the time of the Zabern incident. It represented a big Prussian soldier beside a little Alsatian peasant girl, dissolved in tears. The text read: 'For forty years I have been beating you, and you don't love me yet.' For four months we have been making the acquaintance of this Prussian régime, and we don't love it yet."

SAILINGS FOR WAR ZONE.

Cargo of Cotton Shipped from Galveston to Russia, Via Gothenburg.

GALVESTON, May 5.—The following ships sailed today for the war zone:

The Leelanaw, American, for Gothenburg with a cargo of 6,00 bales of cotton for trans-shipment to Vladivostock, Russia, valued $358,000. This is the first shipment made in such manner and is regarded as an experiment.

The Meltonian, British, for Liverpool with a cargo of cotton.

BOSTON, May 5.—The steamer Lord Sefton, of the Cunard Line, left this port today for Liverpool with a large cargo, including 64,000 bushels of wheat, 25,000 bushels of barley, 300 tons of provisions, 500 tons of spelter, 500 tons of steel, 100 tons of flour, 200 tons of lumber, 2,000 bales of cotton, 4,700 boxes of cheese, and 25 auto trucks.

The Leyland Line steamship Colonial, which sailed this afternoon for London, carried 897 hcres for the British army.

NOT A SPY, SAYS SWOBODA.

But He Admits That He Sometimes Used an Alias.

PARIS, May 5.—A vigorous defense against the charge of espionage preferred against him was made by Raymond Swoboda when he was examined yesterday by Major Jullien of the Paris Permanent Court-Martial, says the Petit Journal. In an effort to prove his assertion that he really had important business deals on hand he gave the name of a person who loaned him 2,500 franc, ($500,) knowing that he was about to realize handsome profits.

Referring to the charges of espionage Swoboda said that the remarks he made before the war began did not show he was aware of German's military plans. He asserted that anyone who read German newspapers and pamphlets would have gained the conviction that Europe was on the evrge of hostilities.

The prisoner insisted that his name was Swoboda, but admitted that he occasionally had been known as Schwind.

Gen. von Seidenitz Killed.

AMSTERDAM, May 5, (via London.)—A dispatch received here from Berlin says that General Hugo von Seidenitz has been killed on the field of battle.

WATSON TELLS BRITISH GERMANS MAY WIN

Denounces British Apathy in the Face of a "Supremely Formidable" Foe.

LONDON, May 5.—William Watson, the poet, has contributed a prose article to The Evening News in which he denounces the apathy of the British Government and people in the following terms:

"It is high time that the masses of the people of this country had it driven and hammered into their somewhat slow minds, for no gentler mode of introducing it will suffice, that it is very doubtful indeed whether we are going to beat the Germans at all."

Criticising the "lulling assurances that all will ultimately be well," Mr. Watson praises the spirit of the Germans and declares "our allies and we ourselves are in imminent and grievous peril." Continuing Mr. Watson makes the statement that Germany is "supremely formidable with the spirit that makes her an unprecedented menace and terror to us and to the world," and he declares that "we are acting, so far as our land forces are concerned, if not a subordinate, at any rate a secondary part in this gigantic drama of the nations, and it will be the fault of our own apathy, sluggishness, and fatal optimism if the drama darkens at the last into a tragedy both for us and the truest interests of mankind."

LIVERPOOL WOMEN DRILL.

LIVERPOOL, April 15, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—A regiment of women, a thousand strong, is quietly drilling at Liverpool. It is composed of soldiers' and sailors' wives, who are tired of sitting idly at home thinking of their absent husbands.

The commanding officer is Miss Phyllis Lovell. The Government plans to enroll some of the women as orderlies in local hospitals.

MAURETANIA SAILS MAY 29.

Cunard Line Answers German Warning by Increase in Service.

Following the advertisement, sent out from the German Embassy at Washington last Friday, warning Americans not to travel in British liners, the agents of the Cunard Line announced yesterday that the Mauretania would be placed in commission on May 28 from Liverpool. In conjunction with the Lusitania she will operate in a fortnightly express service between New York and Liverpool until further notice. The Mauretania has been out of commission since December, on account of the war.

The sailings announced so far are: Lusitania, from Liverpool, May 15, and New York, May 29; Mauretania, Liverpool, May 29, and New York, June 12; Lusitania, June 12, and New York, June 26, and Mauretania, from Liverpool, June 26, and New York, July 10.

Both liners are heavily subsided by the British Admiralty, which has taken good care of the Lusitania since she has been running the gantlet of the German submarines.

The Aquitania would probably remain out of commission until the end of the war, it was said.

HELMETS RARE TROPHIES.

British Soldiers Find the Demand Far Exceeds the Supply.

GENERAL HEADQUARTERS OF THE BRITISH ARMY, France, April 23.—German helmets, notwithstanding the thousands of Germans who have been killed, wounded, and captured, are still rare trophies at the British front. There are two chief reasons for this.

The first is that the Germans of late have been wearing caps, the second that the dead and wounded between the lines, on whom most of the hemets are to be found, are in no man's land, where it is almost sure death to venture.

The British soldier appreciates the fact that these helmets are bringing fancy prices in Paris, London, and New York, and he is loth to part with any trophy except for a good sum. A regular clearing house for them has been established, and hundreds are being sent to England for sale to dealers and others.

WARFARE AMID POISONED GASES

British Eyewitness Describes the Hot Fighting Near Ypres.

POLICY OF THE ALLIES

To Wear Down the Foe by Reducing His Forces—Mere Loss of Ground Inconsequential.

GERMAN DEFENSIVE STRONG

The Observer Notes That the Kaiser's Troops Have Lost None of Their Confidence.

LONDON, May 5.—The British official eye-witness, in a long account of the engagement of the last few days in the Ypres region, records that the Germans have continued the use of asphyxiating gases, but with less success than on the first occasion.

Despite the use of gas by the Germans, the narrative says, the French have made continual advances east of the Ypres Canal, south of Pilkem, the result of which has been to remove the wedge occupied by the Germans in the French line between the canal and the Ypres-Langemarck road, a gain of over 1,000 yards. In the course of these advances a large number of German prisoners were taken.

Fumes Blown on the Germans.

While the French continued their advance in this section, it is asserted that the Germans attacked the British south of Neuve Chapelle and at Hill 60, in both cases using gases. In the latter attacks, however, owing to a change in the wind, the fumes were blown back toward the Germans, who are believed to have suffered as the attempt to advance was made by them. Similar tactics are said to have been adopted by the Germans in their attack north of Ypres last Sunday.

"About 5 o'clock in the evening," the eye-witness says, "a dense cloud of suffocating vapors was launched from their trenches along the whole front held by the French right and by our left fom the Ypres-Langemarck Road to a considerable distance east of St. Julien. The fumes did not carry much beyond our front trenches, but these were to a great extent rendered unbearable, and a retirement from them was ordered.

"No sooner had this started than the enemy opened a violent bambardment with asphyxiating shells and shrapnel on our trenches and on our infantry as they were withdrawing. Meanwhile our guns had not been idle. From a distance, perhaps owing to some peculiarity of the twilight, the gas on this occasion looked like a great reddish cloud, and the moment it was seen our batteries poured a concentrated fire on the German trenches.

"Curious situations then arose between us and the enemy. The upper part of the poison belt, shredding into thick wreaths of vapor as it was shaken by the wind, and t he lower and denser part into all ineualities of the ground, and rolling slowly down the trenches. Shells would rend it for a moment, but it only settled dow nagain as thickly as before.

"Nevertheless the German infantry faced it, and they faced a hail of shrapnel as well. In some cases, where the gas had not reached our lines, our troops held firm and shot through the cloud at the advancing Germans. In other cases the men holding the front line managed to move to the flank, where they were more or less beyond the affected area. Her they waited until the enmy came on, and then bayonetted them when they reached our trenches.

"On the extreme left our supports waited until the wall of vapor reached our trenches, when they charged through it and met the advancing Germans with the bayonet as they swarmed over the parapets.

Mowa Down by British Guns.

"South of St. Julien the denseness of the vapor compelled us to evacuate the trenches, but reinforcements arrived, who charged the einemy before they could establish themselves in position. In every case the assaults failed completely. Large numbers were mown down by our artillery. Men were seen falling in heaps and others scattering and runing back to their own lines. Many who reached the gas cloud could not make their way through it, and in all probability a great number of the wounded perished from the fumes.

"Further to the east a similar attack was made about 7 P. M., which seems to have been attended with even less success, and the assaulting infantry was at once beaten back by our artillery fire.

"It was not long before all our trenches were reoccupied and the whole line re-established in its original position. The attack on the French met with the same result.

Heroic Defense at Zonnebeke.

"A great deal has been said of the troops on the left, which saved the situation on April 22-23, but the services rendered by the British infantry farther east were no less remarkable. The area to the north and east of Zonnebeke, representing a narrow horn of the Salient, formed a kind of bastion. Throughout the fighting this garrison held firm under a raking artillery fire from all sides and under repeated assaults, which were delivered with so much determination that the enemy more than once reached their trenches before they were beaten back.

"Not only was this so, but while our men in this quarter were engaged in repelling attacks in front they knew all the time that the troops on their left were falling back. The test was as hard as any soldier can be asked to endure."

The eye-witness then relates incidents showing the steadiness of the Indian troops, who, he says, "advanced under a murderous fire, their war cry swelling louder and louder above the din."

"Prisoners captured in the recent fighting," the narrive continues, "stated that one German corps lost 80 per cent. of its men in the first week, that the losses from our artillery fire, even during days when no attacks were taking place, had been very heavy, and that many of their own men had suffered from the effects of the gas.

"It would seem that a large number of infantry who had only received only three weeks' training, were brought up during the battle to replace the casualdes."

Many German Stragglers.

The eye witness then quotes a German brigade order telling the officers to have the field of battle and the ground in the rear patrolled for stragglers. It complains that many of the soldiers accompany to the rear men who are only slightly wounded.

"This," says the eye witness, "would impress some as failure in discipline on the part of the German soldiers; but under the stress of fighting and in view of the losses and the strain imposed upon the men this is only to be expected."

German Gains Maintained.

"In regard to the recent fighting on our left, it is desirable that the German offensive should be viewed in its true perspective, and that it should be neither belittled nor exaggerated. Effected in the first instance by surprise, as a novel form of atack, it resulted in a considerable gain of ground for the enemy. As measured by the standard of trench warfare, the greater part of which has so far been maintained by such bodies of fresh troops as were available in the neighborhood of the operation.

"There seems to have been a strong local counter-offensive undertaken in reply to the allied offensive at other points, and made with the same object as previous attacks delivered during the last few months—such, for instance, as those made in February southeast of Ypres, at St. Eloi on March 14, and at other points on the French front. Between all these earlier efforts and the last there was no difference in kind, the only difference being that in this latest occasion the attempt had been carried out with the aid of poisonous gases.

"There is no reason why we should not expect similar tactics in the future. They do not mean that the Allies have lost the initiative in the Western theatre, nor that they are likely to lose it. They do mean, however, and the fact has been repeatedly pointed out, that the enemy's defensive is an active one, that his confidence is still unshaken, and that he still is able to strike in some strength where he sees the chance, or where local advantage can be secured.

"The true idea of the meaning of the operations of the Allies can be gained only by bearing in mind that it is their primary object to bring about the exhaustion of the enemy's resources in men.

"The extent of the ground covered by either side, as measured on the map, is usually a minor matter, though a position of certain points or of areas may, for tactical reasons, be of considerable military importance. Progress, therefore, as a rule may be judged by the drain caused to the enemy's strength and not by the extent of ground won or lost.

"In the form now assumed by this struggle—a war of attrition— the Germans are bound ultimately to lose, and it is the consciousness of this fact that inspires their present policy. This is to achieve, as early as possible, some success sufficient in magnitude to influence the neutrals, to discourage the Allies, to make them weary of the struggle, and to induce the belief among the people ignorant of war that nothing has been gained by the past efforts of the Allies because the Germans have not yet been driven bck. It is being undertaken with a political rather than a strategical object.

"It is to that extent from a military standpoint a sign of weakness. Another sign of weakness is the adoption of illegal methods of fighting, such as spreading poisonous gas. It is a confession b the Germans that they have lost their former great superiority in artillery and are, in any cost, seeking another technical advantage over their enemy as a substitute.

"Nevertheless this spirit, this determination on the part of our enemies to stick at nothing, must not be underestimated. Though it may not pay the Germans in the long run, it renders it all the more obvious that they are a foe that can be overcome only by the force of overwhelming numbers of men an guns."

DENIES BOYCOTTING US.

German-American Economic League Issues an Explanation.

In connection with the growing anti-American feeling in Germany as a result of the shipments of arms and ammunition to the Allies, the Board of Directors of the German-American Economic League at Berlin has issued an announcement denying that a boycotting campaign has been started in Germany against American trade. The statement, as published in the Frankfurter Zeitung of April 13, says:

"That the practical impossibility of keeping up neutral trade with the United States has greatly alienated public sentiment in Germany and the shipment of arms to the enemies of Germany has evoked much bitterness, is in accordance with the facts. Individual and unrepresentative attempts to utilize this mood in favor of crowding out certain American wares have for some time been met by the German-American Economic League, with general disapproval. The German-American Economic League has had no occasion to take a new position, since nothing is known of a boycotting campaign against American wares in Germany.

"If the United States is for the time being, cut off from the German market, this must be attributed to the English measures, and it must be contradicted as a distortion of the facts if this condition, caused by England and actually tolerated by the United States, is blamed upon German boycotting attempts."

CALLS THEM COPPERHEADS.

Major Jones Denounces British Critics of Government and Army.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 5.—The Shipping World, edited by Major Jones, who was an officer of the Federal Army in the American civil war, says:

"During the American rebellion there was a class of people who delighted in hostile criticism of President Lincoln, of the Government in-power, and of the Generals and the armies of the North. They were christened copperheads, after the venomous snake of that name. They are still remembered with odium by the saviours of the Union.

"We in the British Isles have a superfluity of these men with swelled heads and dubious patriotism who treat their native land as neutral ground, who find fault with the Government, the rime Minister, the War Office for recruiting the army, and the ways of the Generals in the field of handling the army.

"These men are an active force among the people and are associated with a goodly number of Sunday papers. They do not seem to flourish in Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, but they are superabundant in London. We venture to suggest to Lord Kitchener that they should be rounded up and be made to march up and down the Strand or Parliament Street with a button knapsack.

"We have a good right to be thankful that there are Americans to offset the mischievous work of these people. We have great speeches in praise of the old country from American statesmen like Root and Lodge and Choate."

ment on the dispatch, adhering to his policy of not discussing the Chinese situation. At the Japanese Embassy it was asserted that nothing was known of any plan for American mediation of the troubles between China and Japan involved in the pending controversy.

In quarters close to the Japanese Embassy the report that the United States was to mediate was not credited. The Kokumin, it was explained, has no sort of official or semi-official status in Japan. It was once the organ of former Prince Katsura and was then regarded as a political organ of considerable authority, but it was said that the Kokumin's influence had dwindled.

Viscount Chinda, the Japanese Ambassador, had a long conference with Secretary Bryan late this afternoon. It was learned that the Japanese Ambassador had no official confirmation of the report that an ultimatum had been delivered by Japan to China, and inquired concerning the latest information received by the State Department.

Secretary Bryan said that the United States had not been advised of the issuance of any Japanese ultimatum to China.

As the State Department here is well informed on the progress of the important negotiations in Peking, this led observers here to the conclusion that in all likelihood the latest Japanese note, while drastic and severe in tone, did not necessarily mark the conclusion of the negotiations.

In Japanese circles it is believed that this note will, in the end, be sufficient to obtain the compliance of China with the principal demands of Japan, though it is by no means certain that there is not still left some ground for compromise which would involve Japanese concessions in matters of detail, providing China recognizes the underlying principles of the Japanese demands. In these same quarters, however, it is pointed out, that it would be too much to expect the Chinese negotiations to make a complete surrender, without an attempt by President Yuan Shi-Kai and his party leaders, to elicit an expression of opinion from the great powers interested in China, and to obtain moral support from them.

It was suggested that this idea might find expression in an identic note from President Yuan perhaps directly or through his Secretary of State, to Great Britain, the United States, France, and even Germany, asserting that the Japanese are seeking to destroy the integrity of China, and to invade the treaty rights of these nations. If the replies received are unresponsive to this appeal, or are confined simply to polite expressions of sympathy without promise of material aid in resisting the Japanese program, it is suggested that President Yuan may then communicate the result of his efforts to the various viceroys of the great Chinese provinces and declare that he finds it necessary to submit without the display of force.

The State Department up to late today had received no advices concerning the internal situation in China, and whether any uneasiness was being felt in legation quarters at Peking are 250 American marines commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Dion Williams, guarding the American Legation. At Tsien-Tsin are the headquarters of the First and Third Battalion and machine gun platoon of the Fifteenth United States Infantry.

CHINESE SEND OUT APPEAL.

Say Japan Fears Public Opinion in This Country.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—The President and the Secretary of State have received from Chinese Christians in the United States an appeal to all Christians in America to pray for China in what is described as "a dark hour." It is stated in the appeal that "the future of America's religious and commercial interests in our nation is threatened" by the Japanese demands. Among other things set forth in the appeal are these:

"This is America's opportunity to play the Good Samaritan to China, which is being robbed and beaten on the world's highway.

"The case is clear and simple, although we invite you to corroborate our statement of it by independent investigation." Japan drove the Germans out of Tsing-Tau, after solemnly promising civilization through the lips of her highest ministers, that she would return to China the land wrested from Germany. She ruthlessly invaded our neutral territory, outside the sphere claimed by Germany, and grossly abused our people and property.

"Then, while the attention of the great powers was focused upon the war in Europe, she made a series of twenty-one amazing and well-nigh incredible demands upon our Government. Acceptance of these would not only destroy China's society and integrity, but also the guaranteed rights of other nations.

"Surely it is beyond argument that if Japan had earned the right to make demands—though why upon China, a neutral and non-combatant nation?—these should be made at the close of the war when the conditions of peace are being settled. Is Japan not willing to abide by the fairness of her allies and of world opinion?

"Alas, Japan's demands could not survive for an hour in the clear light of an international conference. They are a deed of darkness, dependent wholly for their success upon the fact that other nations are engrossed in the European war, and unable to give serious attention to China. If under cover of the world turmoil, Japan can overthrow China's rights, she will have perpetrated a wrong that will set back peace and progress in the Far East for many generations.

"Now there is one power which the Japanese Government fears: this is shown by the lengths to which she has gone to propitiate it. That power is public opinion in the United States, and that opinion is dominated by Christian ideals."

The appeal is signed by Hui Kin, pastor of the Chinese Presbyterian Church, New York; W. K. Chung, Dean of Canton Christian College; S. K. Wong, Wah Tai Company, New York; K. P. Au, Columbia University, and the following in Philadelphia: L. K. Kao, University of Pennsylvania; J. U. Jy, University of Pennsylvania; Henry T. S. Ko, Temple University; C. W. Low, Jefferson Medical College; H. A. Pan, University of Pennsylvania; L. H. T. Wei, Philadelphia Textile School; P. W. Chen, University of Pennsylvania, and P. T. Lau, University of Pennsylvania.

ASQUITH PROMISES TO AVENGE CAPTIVES

Tells Commons Britain Will Exact Reparation if the Germans Maltreat Them.

BONAR LAW FOR REPRISALS

Opposition Leader Suggests the Confiscation of All German Property in the Empire.

LONDON, May 6.—"When the proper time comes, due reparation will be exacted on those—whatever their position or their antecedents—if it can be shown that they have violated all the rules and usages of civilized warfare," said Premier Asquith in the House of Commons this evening in the course of a debate on the treatment of British prisoners by Germany. He added that a careful record of events was being kept and of evidence which could be obtained, in order that, when the proper hour came, proper punishment might be meted out.

The Premier referred to the question of the internment of prisoners in neutral countries, which had been considered. Switzerland, he said, was the only country in which such a plan could be tried, and there were insuperable difficulties in the way of carrying out the proposals. "The duty of this country," concluded the Premier, "is to preserve a clean record."

The question had been brought up by Lord Robert Cecil, who said he had received letters from officers who had been subjected to special confinement in Germany, because of the special treatment accorded to German submarine officers by Great Britain. The British officers said that they were locked up separately in cells, 12 by 6 feet, and were not allowed to smoke.

Andrew Bonar Law, leader of the Opposition, said he hoped that the country would no longer pay any attention to any convention which would prevent the war from being brought to an end. It was worth considering, he said, whether, at the risk of losing all British property in Germany, they should confiscate every German article throughout the British Empire.

the east of it, which made good progress. Up to the present we have taken ten officers and 750 men.

CANADIANS AGAIN IN ACTION.

OTTAWA, Ontario, May 5.—Official confirmation was received today of the report that the Canadian contingent, now in the battle line in Northern France and Belgium, had again been in action. General Hughes, head of the Department of Militia, received a brief cable dispatch announcing this, but giving no details. The message said, however, that the loses were not on the same scale as those suffered in the battle of April 23.

Speaking of the fighting in which the Canadians have been engaged, General Hughes said:

"That is what they went over for, and I see no cause for a feeling of depression. The Germans admit that they lost 12,000 killed and make no mention of their losses in wounded, which must have been very heavy. The total Canadian casualties were only 6,000 killed, wounded and missing.

"With poisonous gases and overwhelming used against them at Langmarck, it is amazing to me that Canadian losses have been no larger, and that our boys were able to inflict such losses on those who attacked. With the leaders they have I fear nothing. I have the utmost faith in the Canadian boys."

In the list of wounded in the Canadian contingent, reported here today, were the names of Privates William Barrie of Sioux City, Iowa, and Matthew J. Callahan of Manchester, N. H.

BIGGER FRENCH BOND ISSUE.

Bill Increasing It to $1,200,000,000 to be Introduced.

PARIS, May 5.—The Minister of Finance, Alexandre Ribot, will introduce in the Chamber of Deputies tomorrow a bill raising the limit of Treasury bonds and national defense bonds for French subscribers to 6,000,000 francs ($1,200,000,000.) This does not include amounts advanced to allied powers and bonds subscribed for in Great Britain.

On April 30 there were in circulation Treasury and national defense bonds amounting to 4,337,000,000 francs, ($1,084,250,000.) This was exclusive of ordinary Treasury bonds and bonds issued in England and the United States to cover purchases of supplies.

Bonds subscribed for in the first half of May will be issued at 95.25.

German Spas Cut Prices.

FRANKFORT, April 15.—Never in the history of the health resorts of Germany, especially these in Bavaria, have prices been so low as they promise to be this coming Summer. In the absence of the customary clientele, it is regarded as likely that the wives and relatives of army and navy officials by thousands will visit the resorts.

Because these persons in many cases cannot afford to pay the prices formerly charged, reductions ranging from 25 to 50 per cent. already have been announced. In most cases the usual "cure tax" is to be dropped, and the charge for baths is to be reduced.

GUNTER'S DEATH LAID TO GERMANS

English Coroner Denounces Torpedoing of Gulflight, Which He Commanded.

SHOCK KILLED, SAYS JURY

Second Officer Swears That the Vessel Was Flying a Large American Flag.

Gerard Is Directed to Ask Berlin If a German Craft Brew Up the Oil Ship.

PENZANCE, England, May 5.—At the inquest today into the death of Captain Alfred Gunter of the American oil tank steamship Gulflight, which was torpedoed on May 1 off the Scilly Islands, the verdict is that his death was caused by "heart failure, accelerated by shock, caused by the torpedoing of the ship."

Testimony given at the inquest showed that the Gulflight was flying a very large American flag at the time she was torpedoed.

Second Officer Boness in his testimony said it was impossible that the submarine could have mistaken the Gulflight for a British vessel, because the weather was clear and the large American flag which the steamer was flying must have been visible for a considerable distance.

The Gulflight, he continued, was torpedoed without the slightest warning. The torpedo struck forward. Had it struck amidships, none of the crew, in his opinion, would have been saved, because the naphtha which the steamer was carrying would have caught fire and the vessel would speedily have been ablaze.

The Coroner said the torpedoing of a neutral vessel was contrary to all the recognized usages of warfare, but that no denunciation of the act would have any effect in inducing the Germans to change their methods.

Captain Gunter's body has been embalmed and will be sent to the United States.

Experts Sent to Examine the Gulflight—Crew to Testify.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—A cable message received at the State Department today from Ambassador Page in London, said that Lieutenant John H. Towers and Naval Constructor Lewis B. McBride, naval attachés of the American Embassy, would make an investigation of the hull of the American tank steamer Gulflight, which was attacked by a submarine last Saturday. The Ambassador said he had ordered Consul Stephens at Plymouth to take the depositions of officers and men of the Gulflight.

Secretary Bryan today received a statement cabled from Plymouth by Chief Officer Smith of the Gulflight and "Consular Agent Banfield" to the Gulf Refining Company, owners of the vessel, in which it was asserted that the Gulflight was flying a large American ensign and that the attack was made without warning. Mr. Banfield is not on the State Department's list of Consular Agents in England.

The statement cabled to the Gulf Refining Company in New York, and telegraphed from there to Secretary Bryan, was as follows:

> One P. M. Saturday, heavy weather, fifteen miles west of Bishops, flying large American ensign, following British patrol boats to Bishops, was torpedoed without warning. Submarine was seen twenty-five minutes, about three and one-half miles ahead. Submerged about five minutes later. Nothing more seen of her. Number on submarine indistinct. Damage on bluff starboard bow below load water line. Reported extensive. Forehold full one foot over stoke hole plate. Cargo in tanks apparently undamaged. Wireless Operator Short and Seaman Chapanetas jumped overboard immediately after the explosion and were drowned. The Captain died sixteen hours later, apparently from heart trouble, as he received no injuries.

Instructions sent to James W. Gerard, the American Ambassador at Berlin to make inquiries in regard to the attack on the Gulflight were based on the assumption that the vessel was torpedoed by a German submarine, and Mr. Gerard was directed to ask the German Foreign Office if this assumption was corect.

All the facts probably will not be available for several days, and until then no decision will be reached by the United States Government as to the nature of the representations it will make. It is thought in German quarters here that if the German Government learns that one of its submarines by mistake did attack the Gulflight regret of the occurrence will be promptly expressed.

Officials here are inclined to the belief that whatever facts are disclosed by the investigation will lead not only to an amicable adjustment of the Gulflight incident, but the exercise of greater precautions by the German submarine commanders in the future.

NIGHT ARTILLERY DUEL OF ALLIES AND TURKS

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Thursday, May 6.—The Daily Chronicle's correspondent with the Allied fleet sends the following dispatch describing the fighting at Gaba Tepe, on the western side of the Gallipoli peninsula, on Tuesday, April 27, and Wednesday, April 28:

"In the hours of darkness between Monday and Tuesday the motor launch on which I was entered the bay under Gaba Tepe. A wonderful spectacle was presented to my eyes. It was a night battle on land with a portion of the fleet assisting. Across the valley running inland from the bay the opposing guns were at work. The ships, too, were busy, and the seachlights' wandering glare could be seen picking out targets for the great guns to batter to pieces.

Heavy and Continuous Firing.

"So continuous and heavy was the firing at times one could discern the outline of the valley across which the two land forces were contending. Shrapnel, too, was bursting in the night sky, and often the whole valley seemed to be transformed into a river of fire.

"During Monday, as I learned later, the Turkish position ran roughly from the crest above Maidos to that above Boghali, our forces being along the seashore and occupying the region which is mapped as Hazmak Valley. Our left had been thrown along the northern and commanding ridge toward Boghali, and the enemy's left advanced westward long the southern ridge in an endeavor to drive us back and cut our forces off. The warships met the foe's advance with shrapnel, while the land forces on the opposite ridge rained down a hail of deadly shells upon them. It was evidently these operations outlined in flashes of flame that I witnessed from the bay during the hours of darkness between Monday and Tuesday.

"For almost the whole night the fire was kept up, and from an excellent point of vantage on Tuesday morning I saw an artillery duel in modern style going on, puffs of smoke, evidently from our guns, indicated that we had held and extended our position along the northern ridge. Here and there at intervals the Turks would reply feebly from farther inland and from the southern ridge; but the latter position had now became extremely dangerous because it was commanded both by the ships out at sea at the valley end and by the land forces on the heights opposite.

"This artillery duel continued intermittently for the greater part of the day. The Queen Elizabeth, or it may have been a sister ship, joining in and at the same time engaging in indirect fire on the enemy's positions on the southern ridge. Late in the afternoon the Turks made another attack, but no advance could be noted on t heir part.

"During this time the shoips away at the entrance to the Dardanelles were very active bombarding the narrows, and, judging by the smoke I could see rising beyond the peninsula, a good deal of work was going on inside the straits.

"Soon after 5 o'clock I witnessed another extraordinary artillery duel. A heavy rain cloud swept down suddenly from the north, enveloping tne whole region in a dense mist. Under cover of this the Turks ran their guns along the southern ridge and suddenly opened a heavy fire across the valley. They were promptly answered by the fire of our guns, which also profited by the darkness to change their position.

"The Turkish fire, therefore, was not very effective. Owing to that fact and because the obscurity had prevented any observation from being taken, the ships off shore had perforce to remain inactive, and the duel had been fought out by the land batteries alone. Vivid flashes of flame lit up both sides of the valley, shrapnel fursting everywhere. For twenty minutes this duel in mist and darkness continued with the utmost ferocity, and by the end of that time the enemy's fire had slackened and the southern ridge had been searched by our guns with blazing shrapnel."

"The Turkish object was evident. Our transports had been moved noth to that part of the coast, and the enemy evidently had the double intention of driving us back to the shore and of preventing the landing of supplies under cover of night.

"Again throughout the next night the ships' batteries and the land guns were busy, and daylight, when it came, seemed to indicate that our forces were masters of all the ridges.

"Wednesday the point of interest was the southern portion of the peninsula. Forces had evidently been landed in Morto Bay between the headlands of Sedd-el-Behr and Eski-Hissarlik, and also north of Cape Teke. This (Wednesday) forenoon they seemed occupying a line astride the two roads leading to the little town of Krithia, about a mile and a half from the extreme point of the pininsula.

"About midday our guns could be seen advancing and the Turks replying from their position, rather more than a mile from the town, which the guns from the fleet had set on fire early in the day.

"Further up the peninsula, but more to the east, is Achi Baba, or Tree Peak, 730 feet high. This height dominates the region and, obviously, is the chief obstacle to our advance.

Queen Elizabeth Engaged.

"A thick cloud of dust marked the Turks' retreat along the coast road, and when they reached the position just mentioned the artillery duel could be easily followed. Most of the movements of the batteries on both sides were quite visible, and the fascination of the spectacle was increased by the heavy shrapnel fire of the Queen Elizabeth, whose shells burst well over the enemy's lines and in front of the advancing guns.

"By 1 o'clock it could be seen that our forces had established themselves right across the eninsula on a line, a mile south of Krithia. Matters remained comparatively quiet till about 3 o'clock, when the flashing and smoke of the guns indicated a further slight advance on Krithia, which was still burning furiously.

"A little more than an hour later there seemed to be indications of a Turkish retreat behind the burning town. There was no evidence, however, that the Turks' position had been wholly abandoned. The ships were now actively bombarding it, and about 5 o'clock the enemy's line appeared to be only three-quarters of a mile from Krithia. Up to that time our advance must have been about a mile and a half.

"About 6 P. M. the strong evening light enabled me to see that the Turks had apperetly retreated to the very outskirts of the smoke-hidden town. They replied fairly vigorously to our fire with shrapnel.

"Then the warships off the coast, together with those at Cape Helles and in Erenkeui Bay, began shelling Tree Peak, directing a very heavy and searching fire upon it. This was doubtless preparatory to an atack upon it, as the town at nightfall was practically in our hands. The Turkish reply was feeble, except at one time at a point on the coast near Krithia, where a battery suddenly opened fire on two cruisers. One of them ran close in shore and silenced the guns in a very few minutes.

"Such was the position when darkness fell. In the afternoon there had been some sudden activity in the northern position. From what I could see I believe we have made continued good progress in throwing a force across the peninsula at that point with the object of commanding the narrows from the hills above. Heavy firing was noticeable, but no definite result could be observed.

"Late in the afternoon a cruiser and a destroyer steamed north to Sulva Bay. Boats could be seen making for the shore, and then the ships, with others stationed there, opened fire on what appeared to be a strong column of the enemy that seemed to be neither retreating nor advancing, but was most likely coming south as reinforcements.

The firing was soon over, and it appeared to have achieved its object.

That part of the peninsula is easily commanded by the fleet's guns, which keep the northern landing force free from attack in that direction. Tonight it appears certain that the firm footing which our two landing forces have secured has given us practically complete command of the extreme point and also of the western side of the peninsula, and that their operations may at any moment have an important effect on the attack as a whole.

ALLGOR NOW ON HOUSEBOAT

Spite Fence Builder Names Craft "They Drove Me to Do It."

SEABRIGHT, N. J., May 5.—James W. Allgor, who has waged war upon the wealthy residents of Rumson for years, landing in jail and an asylum in the fight, is now afloat. Seven years ago Allgor built an ice cream and soda store, but it was not patronized, and he conceived the idea that the wealthy people had forbidden their servants to go in. He erected spite fences and covered them with signs more or less scandalous. He also hung out underwear bearing the names of well-known residents in big letters.

In March Allgor was ousted from his home. All his family had gone previously. He moved over to the shore of the Shrewsbury River and set about building a houseboat. Last night it was launched. Allgor himself broke a bottle of water against the craft and named it They Drove Me to It. A. Y. Bedford fired a two-gun salute for the boat, and the crowd which had gathered gave the craft a cheer.

Allgor says he is going to anchor the boat near the bridge which is used by the Rumsonites and cover the sides of the boat with signs for them to read. The boat will have two rooms and bath.

BARS PRIZE INQUIRY IN THE FRYE CASE

TERMS OF NOTE FRIENDLY

United States Reiterates That It Is Not Bound by Declaration of London.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—By mutual agreement with the German Foreign Office, the State Department today made public the text of its reply to Germany's note concerning the claim of the United States for an indemnity to the owners of the American ship William P. Frye, sunk by the Prinz Eitel Friedrich.

The American communication, sent on April 28, takes note of the fact that Germany accepts liability for the act under the treaty of 1828 between the United States and Prussia, but declines the suggestion that a German prize court pass on the legality of the capture and destruction, under the Declaration of London, the standing of the claimants and the amount of indemnity.

Pointing out that the United States early in the present war announced that it would not be bound by the Declaration of London because it had not generally been ratified, the note asserts that the standing of the claimants and the amount of indemnity lend themselves to diplomatic negotiations, and suggests that the German Embassy in Washington be authorized to deal with the matter.

While it was generally understood that the demand of the United States for full reparation for the destruction of the Frye was based on general principles of international law, the note discloses that this Government regards it as a violation of the obligations imposed upon Germany "under existing treaty obligations between the United States and Prussia." The note goes on to say that "the United States Government, by virtue of its treaty rights, has presented to the Imperial German Government a claim for indemnity on account of the resulting damages suffered by American citizens."

This alludes to the Prussia-American Treaty of Friendship and Commerce of July 11, 1799, taken in connection with Article 12 of the Prussian-American Treaty of Commerce and Navigation of May 1, 1828, which provides that contraband belonging to the subjects or citizens of either party cannot be confiscated by the other in any case, but only detained or used in consideration of payment of the full value of the same. The note presenting the claim for payment of damages for the loss of the Frye merely recited the facts, accompanied by an itimized bill of damages, and requested that full reparation be made. The first allusion to the old treaties was in the note of Herr von Jagow, the German Foreign Minister's note of April 5, in which he urged that unless it could be shown that the cargo of the Frye had an innocent destination and did not have the character of contraband, "the German Government would not be liable for any compensation whatever, according to the general principles of international law." But Herr von Jagow thought the legal situation somewhat different in the light of the special stipulations in the treaties of 1799 and 1828, and declared "on the ground of this treaty stipulation, which is as a matter of course binding on the German prize court the American owners of the ship and cargo would receive compensation even if the court should declare the cargo of wheat to be contraband."

Text of the American Note.

The text of the American note follows:

> In a reply to your Excellency's note of the 5th inst., which the Government of the United States understands admits the liability of the Imperial German Government for the damages resulting from the sinking of the American sailing vessel William P. Frye by the German auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich on Jan. 28, last. I have the honor to say, by direction of my Government, that while the promptness with which the Imperial German Government has admitted its liability is highly appreciated, my Government feels that it would be inappropriate in the circumstances of this case, and would involve unnecessary delay, to adopt the suggestion in your note that the legality of the capture and destruction, the standing of the claimants and the amount of indemnity should be submitted to a prize court.
> Unquestionably the destruction of this vessel was a violation of the obligations imposed upon the Imperial German Government under existing treaty stipulations between the United States and Prussia, and the United States Government by virtue of its liberty rights, has presented to the Imperial German Government a claim for indemnity on account of the resulting damages suffered by American citizens.
> The liability of the Imperial German Government and the standing of the claimants as American citizens and the amount of indemnity are all questions which lend themselves to diplomatic negotiations between the two Governments, and happily the question of liability has already been settled in that way. The status of the claimants and the amount of indemnity are the only questions remaining to be settled, and it is appropriate that they should be dealt with in the same way.
> The Government of the United States fully understands that, as stated in your Excellency's note, the German Government is liable under the treaty provisions above mentionel for the damages arising from the destruction of the cargo as well as from the destruction of the vessel. But it will be observed that the claim under discussion does not include damages for the destruction of the cargo, and the question of the value of the cargo, therefore, is not involved in the present discussion.
> The Government of the United States recognizes that the German Government will wish to be satisfied as to the American ownership of the vessel and the amount of the damages sustained in consequence of her destruction.

Wants It Settled Here.

> These matters are readily ascertainable, and if the German Government desires any further evidence in substantiation of the claim on these points, in addition to that furnished by the ship's papers, which are already in the possession of the German Government, any additional evidence found necessary will be produced. In that case, however, inasmuch as any evidence which the Gerernment may wish to have produced is more accessible, and can more conveniently be examined in the United States than elsewhere, on account of the presence there of the owners and captain of the William P. Frye and their documentary records, and other possible witnesses, the Government of the United States ventures to suggest the advisability of transferring the negotiations for the settlement of these points o the Imperial German Embassy at Washington.
> In view of the admission of liability by reason of specific treaty stipulations, it has become unnecessary to etenr into a discussion of the meaning and affect of the Declaration of London, which is given some prominence in Your Excellency's note of April 5, further than to say, that, as the German Government has already been advised, the Government of the United States does not regard the Declaration of London as in force.

RELEASES MEN FOR WAR

Sylvia Pankhurst Clashes with Officials on the Subject of Equal Pay for Women.

LONDON, April 15 (Correspondence of The Associated Press).—Employment in all departments of the British Government sevice is officially thown open to women for the first time, in a circular issued by the Cabinet though the Board of Trade. The circular urges all Government departments to displace, wherever possible, men employes of military age with women, and offers to obtain suitable women substitutes for various clerical and other places through the Government Labor Exchanges.

The circular is a sequel to a recent War Office statement appealing for the release of more Government employes for service at the front. In this statement Lord Kitchener was quoted as saying: "I confidently look to the heads of departments to arrange by finding suitable substitutes, for the necessary permission to be given freely to their subordinates who are prepared to join the colors."

The Board of Trade's circular points out that "a large number of women clerks have registered at the Labor Exchangee, and considerable numbers of these already have been engaged by certain Government departments. In addition, a special register is being compiled of women who have signified their willingness to undertake service during the continuance of the war, to release men for combatant duties. This register already contains 30,000 names, and will supply a large number of women qualified to take the place of officials who may be released."

The Board of Trade has itself released and in a large number of cases their places have been taken by women.

It remains to be seen what reply will be made by the heads of the various Government departments to the Board of Trade's circular. Many of these departments hitherto have drawn a line very rigidly against any women employes. All of them will now make a careful survey of their work and ascertain to what extent men of recruiting age can be replaced with women.

It has been for years the aim of various women's organizations to obtain from the Government an equal opportunity for both sexes in the Government employ. The Board of Trade circular is regarded as an official declaration that for the period of the war at least, the barrier of sex will have no sanction from the Cabinet.

Sylvia Pankhurst, the militant suffragette, has had a clash with Lloyd George and the Liberal Government over the employment of women. The Chancellor, in reply to a letter from her, promised that women doing piecework would receive the same rate of pay as the men were getting, but said nothing about time work. Miss Pankhurst then wrote to him on that point, but received no answer. An indirect reply was made, however, by Mr. Runiciman, M. P., President of the Board of Trade, who said that no conditions had been laid down by the Government as to time work.

Miss Pankhurst has made a statement to the press in which she accuses the Government of refusing to guarantee women the same pay as men for time work, adding:

"From the women's point of view, it is unjust that women should be employed to do men's work at a lower rate; from the man's point of view, it is disastrous. Guarantees to take men back into employment after the war can never be enforced; and if any proof of this is needed, we find it a fact that promises by employers to make allowances to the wives of workmen who are fighting at the front are already being broken on every hand."

PEACE WOMEN WILL VISIT ENGLAND FIRST

Envoys, Headed by Jane Addams, Then Will Go to Other Belligerent Countries.

THE HAGUE, May 5.—Great Britain will be the first of the belligerent nations to be visited by the peace envoys named by the International Women's Congress to initiate a world movement for peace. It has not been determined whether the women will endeavor to see King George or Premier Asquith, but they probably will seek to reach the Premier.

Miss Jane Addams of Chicago is at the head of the delegation, whose other permanent members are Signora Genoni of Italy and Dr. Aletta Jacobs of Holland. A local member will be appointed from each nation invited. The committee will be received by the Dutch Premier on Friday, before departing for London.

After visiting Great Britain, the delegation will proceed to Berlin, Vienna, Budapest, Berne, Rome, Paris, Havre and possibly Madrid. In the meantime a second delegation, headed by Mme Rosika Schwimmer, President of the Hungarian Woman Suffrage Association, will visit the Scandinavian countries to do what is possible to stop the war. The other members of this committee are Miss Chrystal MacMillan of England, Mrs. C. Ramondt of Holland and Miss Emily Balch of Wellesley College, Massachusetts. It is possible that another committee will be sent to Russia, and that one will be selected also to go to Washington and see President Wilson.

Letters on behalf of the peace movement will be sent to the Governments of all other nations represented at The Hague conferences.

ALLIES' SHELLS SET TURK TOWNS ABLAZE

ALLIED FORCES ADVANCING

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 4, (via London, Thursday, May 6.)—Despite the decision of the Turkish Government to refuse all correspondents access to the Dardanelles region, exception was made in the case of two Germans and The Associated Press correspondent.

The party arrived on the night of May 1, while the town of Dardanelles after thirty hours, was still ablaze. The scene was one of desolation with crumpled walls and houses.

Maidos also was burned, and yesterday (Monday) the town of Gallipoli was set ablaze, all by indirect fire from the Gulf of Saros, with ignition shells, directed by captive balloons and aeroplanes.

Incessant and heavy fighting on the Gallipoli Peninsula has continued from the first landing of the Allied forces, but details of the new campaign cannot be told for military reasons.

The Straits themselves, so far as is known, have been seriously attacked since the reopening of the operations, but yesterday seven ships were seen and hard off Sddul Bahr, firing intermittently.

Turkish Forces Have Lost Heavily.

PARIS, Thursday, May 6.—A dispatch from Mytilene to the Havas Agency says that Turkish pdisoners, who have arrived at Tenedos, admit that the Turkish Army has suffered enormous losses from the combined fire of the guns of the fleet and the quick firers of the expeditionary forces.

The Allies, according to reliable information, occupied several strategic position on Tuesday, and the land forces continue to receive reinforcements daily.

Another dispatch from Mytilene says that a Turkish regiment was annihilated during the fighting along the Dardanelles last night, and that Allies transported 1,000 more prisoners to Tenedos and Moudros.

The dispatch also says that a squadron of warships of the Allies again bombarded the Dardanelles forts and the Turkish encampments on the coast.

A Havas dispatch from Athens, filed yesterday, says that the inhabitants of Gallipoli and other parts of the peninsula are crossing in large numbers to the Asiatic shore.

Two Turkish aeroplanes have been brought down by shells from allied warships, according to a dispatch from Saloniki. Setting out from Sedd-el-Bahr the aeroplanes flew over the fleet, dropping several bombs, all of which, however, fell harmlessly in the water. They had put out to sea to reconnoiter Lemnos and Tenedos when they were brought down.

The German aviators were rescued and made prisoners.

LONDON, May 5.—Adrianople has been almost completely denuded of troops, while all heavy artillery has been removed from the city, says a dispatch to The Times from Sofia. Many of the troops which had been sent to the Gallipoli peninsula have been recalled in haste and sent to Kirk-Kilisseh, thirty-two miles northeast of Adrianople, and to Midia, on the Black Sea.

The Turkish Government has reconsidered its decision to suspend railway service to Bulgaria in the fear that Bulgaria might thus be provided with an excuse to seize the railway. One train daily will be operated to Dedeagatch.

ROUTED TURKISH ARMY PURSUED BY RUSSIANS

Armenians Hold Van Against Turks and Kurds—Massacre of Villagers Continues.

TIFLIS, Transcaucasia, May 5. — The pursuit of the defeated Turkish army under the command of Khali Bey, in the Khori-Dilman region of the Caucasus, is being continued, according to trustworthy advices reaching Tiflis.

This battle, which has resulted in heavy losses for the Turks, began April 29 at Hantahta, near Urumiah. In the beginning the Russians stood off the Turks, but the latter received reinforcements and on April 30 the Russians abandoned Dilman and intrenched themselves at Magonzhio, the first village on the way to Khori. From this position they pounded the Turks with their heavy artillery until the arrival of Russian reinforcements.

Three hundred refugees from Dilman have arrived at Julfa, just over the border in Russia, and 1,200 more are on their way. The Russian Consul here is taking measures to prevent refugees from Urumiah and Dilman entering the Caucasus.

Nersus, the Bishop of Tabriz, Persia, has arrived here. He describes the situation at Van as desperate. Eight hundred Turks and a large number of Kurds are active there, destroying Armenian villages. Of 300 inhabitants of the village of Rashva, only three escaped. The Armenians, according to the Bishop, are still hoping for American and Italian diplomatic interference.

At Van, where a month ago the Armenians were forced to take the defensive and barricade the town, they now have been standing off the Turks and the Kurds for a week. Four Turkish regiments, with artillery, are advancing against these Armenians from Erzingan. They are threatened also by gendarmes from the Persian border.

It is feared that the history of 1895 and 1896 will be repeated.

(In these years reforms for Armenia were demanded after a series of acts of oppression on the part of Turkey. The presentation of the demands by the States of Europe was followed by terrible massacres of Armenians, which began in September of 1895, and continued into 1896.)

It is declared in Armenia that the Young Turks have adopted the policy pursued by Abdul Hamid in 1905, namely, the annihilation of the Armenians.

The existing state of terror has prevented the planting of crops and a famine is impending. The city of Erzerum, in Turkish Armenia, has today 300 cases of typhus fever.

WADED ASHORE AT SARI BAIR.

British Troops Were Too Eager to Wait for Their Boats.

CAIRO, (via London,) May 5.—Some of the British troops that took part in the landing at the Dardanelles have arrived in Egypt on sick leave. They are the first men to reach here from the scene of the fighting, and they relate some stirring incidents in connection with the landing of the allied forces at the strait.

At Sari Bair the men were so eager to get ashore that they jumped from the small boats before they had been beached, and found themselves up to their necks in water. Wading ashore, they rushed three ridges in succession, and a running bayonet fight extended for a distance of more than three miles. In the words of one enthusiastic "Tommy," "we lifted the Turks on the end of our bayonets and hurled them over our heads."

Continuing their recital, these men relate that with the arrival of reinforcements tne ridges were carried by storm in the first rush. The concentrated Turkish fire during the beginning of the fighting was terrific. Shrapnel, machine gun and rifle caused very heavy casualties among the Allies, but the wounds of many of the men are slight, and they will soon again be on the fighting line.

TURKS REPORT VICTORY.

Say They Drove the Allies from Sedd-el-Bahr Trenches.

CONSTANTINOPLE, via London,) May 5.—The Turkish War Office gave out the following statement today:

> An attempt of the enemy to land troops near Gaba Tepe, south of Avi Burnu, yesterday morning failed.
> The night before last our troops attacked Sedd-el-Bahr, in spite of a bombardment by the enemy's flet, and drove them out of their trenches, capturing three machine guns.

CENSORED POEMS RELEASED

Last October, just after Gabriele d'Annunzio had published his war poem, "Arise, Italia!" a metrical translation of which appeared in THE NEW YORK TIMES of Oct. 11, he wrote another called "Dardanelles," which the Government promptly suppressed. In January a poem by "Trilussa," (Signor Salustri,) who writes in the Roman dialect, was also suppressed. This last was to have appeared on the back cover of a calendar issued by the Central Italian Committee for Belgium. It was called "The Bee."

Both poems are now being published by the Roman press—that is, "The Bee" has been published and certain papers have promised "The Dardanelles," a poem of about 300 lines, as soon as arrangements can be made with the author. "The Bee" in the Roman dialect with a literal, line by line, translation runs as follows:

> Un' Aquila nera,
> Pe' fa' la provista
> De miele e de cera,
> Piombo sur paese
> Dell' ape e je prese
> La robba che c'era
> (Che belle pretese!
> Che bella maniera!)
> Fu un vero massacro
> Fu un vero macello,
> Sfascio tuto quello
> Ch'e bello e ch'e sacro.
> Cor becco e l'artiji
> Je ruppe le case
> Je sfranse li fiji—
> Ma l'Ape rimaze.
> Rimase e se adesso
> Va in cerca de fiori
> Pe' fa' li lavori
> Che j' hanno sopresso;
> L'Italia amorosa
> Je manna una res a.

GARIBALDI DAY PASSES PEACEFULLY

FIFTY VETERANS PRESENT

D'Annunzio Says the Spirit of Sacrifice Has Entered the Soul of the Nation.

GENOA, May 5.—Amid the crashing of bands, the thunder of cannon and the clamor of an enormous assemblage the monument at Quarto Sant' Elena commemorating the departure of Garibaldi and his thousand of "Red Shirts," in May of 1860 on the expedition which resulted in the acuisition of Sicily by Italy was unveiled today.

Following an addres by the Mayor of Genoa the poet Gabriele d'Annuncio, stepped to the foot of the monument. He had previously declared: "I will not gaze on Italy again until she awakes from her slumber," and his presence at the ceremonies was considered as of grave portent, and his speech was eaerly awaited.

D'Annunio glorified the new union of Italy and the deeds of Garibaldi, referring touchingly to Garibaldi's two grandsons who were killed in the Argonne. The spirit of sacrifice, he said, had entered the soul of the nation; it was born again. In the ceremony in which they were taking part he saw the supreme sign; he saw Garibaldi, who would cry tomorrow: "Give all you possess; give it to radiant Italy."

"Blessed are those pure of heart who shall bring back victory; they shall witness the triumphant beauty of Italy," he said in his peroration, which was frequently and enthusiastically applauded by the multitude, and the conclusion of which brought all to their feet waving handkerchiefs and tossing hats in the air.

Every province of Italy was represented at the ceremony, although King Victor Emmanuel and members of the Cabinet who had expected to attend the exercises were unable to be present on account of the political situation.

The Garibaldi veterans headed a long parade, which passed through the town. As the veterans reached the esplanade in the Place Umberto massed choirs sang the hymn of Garibaldi.

The Mayor issued a proclamation, in which he said:

"Genoa today fulfills her vow to immortalize in bronze the brilliant exploits of the Garibaldians. Never before have we felt so strongly vibrating within us the soul of the Fatherland which draws from the annals of its liberty the firmness of its will and its strength for sacrifice."

The proclamation expressed the hope that the monument would ever inspire the ideal of Italy's glory in the hearts and minds of her children.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENOA, May 5, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—Today's inauguration of the monument to Garibaldi and his thousand was the most imposing national and patriotic manifestation ever seen in Genoa.

The city is crowded with people from all parts of the country. Delegations continued to arrive throughout the night, and at daybreak long processions with banners flying marched along the road to Quarto, where fifty-five years ago Garibaldi embarked with his thousand to conquer the Kingdom of Sicily. Today it was difficul to approach the port, the only road running between the mountains and the sea being almost choked with traffic.

Fifty Garibaldian veterans made the journey from Genoa by a steamer bearing the name Lombardi, which was the name of the vessel on which they sailed May 5, 1860. A special platform had been erected for them around the monument, which stands amid cypresses and olives on a jutting rock 100 feet above the sea.

The ceremony was remarkably impressive. In the bay below were gathered numerous ships which had brought patriots from all the neighboring ports. On the mountain side waved thousands of banners, the national flag itself proudly above all others.

SERBIANS ANXIOUS OVER ITALY'S DESIGNS

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NISH, Serbia, May 5, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—The possibility of intervention by Italy is arousing the greatest interest in Serbia and in political circles, and every indication of Italian designs on the Dalmatian coast is carefully examined.

With Italy's claim to the Trentino and Istria, the Serbs are in sympathy, but when Italian ambitions are seen to extend to the Dalmatian Islands and the Dalmatian coast fear is expressed that Serbia is about to be robbed of advantages for which she has been fighting in the present war, should victory crown the arms of the Triple Entente powers. Serbia hopes to reap reward on the Dalmatian coast. Italy, however, is claiming Dalmatia, and all Serbia would gain if the Italian view prevailed, would be a part cut off from the interior of the country by the barrier of the Dunaric Alps. Even the free development of this could be hindered by Italy, who would acquire Spalato, the natural route for commerce with Bosnia and Herzegovina. On the ground of nationality Serbia has a prior claim to Dalmatia, which in 1900 was peopled by over 550,000 Serbo-Croats, as compared with 15,279 Italians.

Unless the injustice done Serbia under the Treaty of Berlin is redressed in the manner indicated, Serbia's position at the close of the war will not materially improve. The only changes that would have been effected would be the substitution of Italian for Austrian predominance, in other words, the transfer to Italy of the power formerly exercised by Austria-Hungary.

Opinion in political circles may therefore be summed up in the following words:

"Let Italy take Albania, if the Triple Entente powers agree, and construct there as many ports as she likes, but do not let her strangle or suffocate Serbia by depriving her of arteries essential to her commercial existence."

AWAITS AUSTRIA'S REPLY.

ROME, May 5.—The excitement caused by the abandonment of King Victor Emmanuel and the Ministers of their proposed trip to Quarto Sant' Elena has subsided in arliamentPary circles, where it is believed there has been no essential modification of the situation. Since Monday sensational rumors have given place to more moderate reports, according to which conversations between Italy and Austria are being continued.

Foreign Minister Sonnino received calls yesterday afternoon from the British and French Ambassadors and the Secretary of the Russian Embassy. Count Goluchowski, who is being sent to Rome on a special mission by the Austrian Government, is expected here tomorrow. He will be received by the King and Baron Sonnino. He is supposed to be bringing the answer of Austria to the reported request of Italy made through Prince von Bülow that Austria make a clear statement of its intentions.

If this answer is considered unsatisfactory it is believed the Salandra Ministry will take the position that it has availed itself without result of every possible means of averting war.

AMSTERDAM, May 6.—The German papers are beginning to display anxiety regarding Italy's attitude. The Vossische Zeitung, the Lokal Anzeiger, and the Tageblatt, all emphasize the fact that the negotiations between Italy and Austria-Hungary have not yet been definitely broken and that therefore there is still justifiable hope of a satisfactory solution.

They admit that the situatino is serious, however, but at the same time insist that Italian intervention on the side with Germany's enemies would hake no difference to German determination or confidence in the final result.

MASONS PRAY FOR PEACE.

New York Members Long for End of European Conflict.

This prayer for world peace was adopted yesterday at the second session of the 134th annual communication of the Grand Lodge of Masons of the State of New York, in Masonic Hall, 46 West Twenty-fourth Street:

> Resolved, that the Grand Lodge of Masons, State of New York, looks with profound grief upon the situation of hundreds of thousands of Masonic brethren, as well as of the millions of other human beings, who are engaged in the European conflict in the ranks of the various countries.
> It unites in the prayer that the day may not be far distant when peace shall again bring her blessings to all nations and when our brethren shall once more happily resume the path illumined by the great light which radiates from the Masonic altar to the glory of God and the Order of Free and Accepted Masons throughout the world.

There were visiting delegations from Pennsylvania and New Jersey yesterday. After a luncheon at the Republican Club the delegates went for an automobile ride and had dinner at the Republican Club last night.

Today there will be the election and installation of officers.

FAVORS OPEN SHOP FOR RAILROADS

Vice President Atterbury of the Pennsylvania Denies Charges of Unfairness.

MUST KEEP TRAINS RUNNING

Cannot Let Labor Interfere with Schedules—Tells Industrial Commission He Favors Mediation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—W. W. Atterbury, Vice President of the Pennsylvania Railroad, today explained in detail before the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, the labor policies of that corporation and its dealings with its employes. He declared that the Pennsylvania's first duty was to run trains, and that it opposed any labor organization which attempted to stop the running of trains. In other words, he said, the Pennsylvania was opposed to sympathetic strikes and the closed shop.

An industrial movement that met the approval of Mr. Atterbury was the extension of the Newlands act, which provided for Federal mediation and conciliation so as to include all the men employed by the railroad, and not merely those engaged in transportation. The Pennsylvania Railroad, he asserted, favored the Compensation act proposed by the Pennsylvania Legislature, and would welcome a Federal compensation law.

These were some of the features of Mr. Atterbury's testimony which was a frank discussion of the railroad's policy toward its employes and labor organizations. After reading a prepared statement, Mr. Atterbury submitted himself to an examination in which he went into every angle of the labor situation and explainer the status of the railroad to the legislation mentioned.

"We recognize that there are three things important in the railroad relations," said Mr. Atterbury. "We owe a duty to our stockholders, our employes, and to the public. Our first duty is to run trains, and we have never missed a train schedule on account of a strike. Any organization that takes out of our hands our desire to control our employes is inimical to us. We are opposed to the closed shop and sympathetic strikes."

Road Keeps in Touch with Men.

Concerning the manner in which the railroad kept in touch with sentiment among its men, Mr. Atterbury said:

"Confidential inxestigators, in no way connected with the railroad's police department, are employed to ascertain and report to the officials, the conduct and sentiment of employes, and the movements, actions and plans of labor leaders and organizers. These men are not empowered to make arrests.

"Labor leaders, with control of the workmen through membership in labor organizations, can cause employes to leave their work, resulting in a strike and interfering with train operations, without giving any previous warning to the railroad company. As the rairoad company has the responsibility of main, subject to fines by the Government for delays to the mails, it must keep itself informed of the movements of labor agitators. It is necessary that trained men be employed to conduct these investigations and make reports to the officials.

"Confidential investigators are also employed to identify themselves as employes in various departments to secure correct information as to any efforts of labor organizers among employes which tend to destroy the harmony and friendly feeling which for many years have generally existed between this company and its employes. Investigators are also employed to learn the grievances, if any, of the employes which have been reported to labor organiaztions for adjustment; instead of being reported to company officials in order that such satisfactory settlement as conditions will permit may be made and to keep the officers fully informed of conditions which they should know, to permit them properly to manage the property.

$800,000 a Year for Spy System.

"It is necessary to maintain a police system and a system of espionage," added Mr. Atterbury. "We know what is going on. We have emissaries in the ranks of labor and they in our. They have volunteers who give us investigation and we employ Pinkertons as well. There are about 400 in the Police Department, and we are prepared for anything that might happen. We do not leave anything undone to keep our trains running that is legal and lawful."

Mr. Atterbury explained that it cost the Pennsylvania Railroad $800,000 a year to maintain its police and espionage system. But half of this was expended, he thought, to break the strike on the Monogahela system last year.

In answering the question whether it was possible for the State to give police protection Mr. Atterbury said:

"In theory, yes, but in practice, no. There is so much opposition to the State protecting corporations that we have found it necessary to look after protection for ourselves.

"We have the finest body in the men in the United States in Pennsylvania, the State Constabulary. Yet every labor organization is bitterly opposed to its enlargement. We have our own police system and it does the trick. It is a dream of the millenium to expect police protection from the States, with all the different political winds blowing through the Legislature. If the States should properly protect us it would be an ideal situation. We ought not to attend to the police duty of the States, but we are forced to do it."

Denies Charge of Labor Men.

Mr. Atterbury wa then asked to explain the seven charges made against the railroad by H. B. Perham, President of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers. These charges dealt with the company's policies toward labor organizations.

"Does the ennsPylvania Railroad deny the right of organization to all employes, except those engaged in transportation?" Mr. Atterbury was aked.

"I deny that," he answered. "We do not oppose the men under our control joining labor organizations provided they do not submit themselves to association which brings a cessation to their labors, through a sympathetic strike or something our men are not interested in. Our position is identical with that of the Federal Government respecting thepostal railway employes. The Government forbids these employes joining an organization that might call them out of their work through sympathy."

"Is the question asked whether a man is a member of a union?"

"No. We never ask the question in employing a man unless he begins to bother us. We are acting on the defensive and not the offensive."

"Is the relation between labor and the employer getting beter?"

"I should say so. In the last ten years there has developed a new code. It is different from that of twenty years ago. In the Pennsylvania Railroad all of us come up from the ranks. We are one big family, and we try to avoid outside interference with our affairs. I should be very much surprised if we ever see a great railroad strike again. Industrial conditions are getting better. Labor and employer are closer in touch."

Mr. Atterbury said he was opposed to compulsory arbitration, and was not opposed to many features of the Canadian days' notice before a strike can be declared, and allows the government to present both sides of the dispute.

H. B. Perham of the Order of Telegraphers, who was on the stand yesterday, was recalled this morning, and told of his unsuccessful fight against the Pennsylvania Railroad. He said that 500 trai ndispatchers had such tense work that they were driven insane and became old men at the age of 40.

Says Road Rules Altoona.

"These men are living in a constant state of terror," said Mr. Perham. "They are laid off for the slighest mishap." He declared that money was used by the railroads to fight the eight-hour law in the Maryland Legislature.

Testifying to conditions in Altoona, he said:

"What compels hotels to act thus?"

"Fear of th eloss of patronage and a los sof their licenses."

"Does the Pennsylvania Railroad interest itself in who gets licenses in that county?"

"It is so reported. Their influence reaches to the police courts, and even the higher courts and newspapers. Public speech in Altoona is impossible. The Pennsylvania Railroad prevents any one hiring a hall. To live in Altoona one must live as the Pennsylvania desires. It is a clear case of 'My company 'tis of thee.'"

Mr. Perham said that labor had not yet decided upon what was the best compensation law. After laws were tried out in the several States, labor would select the best.

W. H. Pierce of Harrisburg, an organizer for the Brotherhood of Federated Railway Engineers, told of his fight in 1911 to organize the Pennsylvania Railroad. He said that many men who joined his organization were discharged by the railroad.

Mr. Pierce will resume his testimony tomorrow, when other officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad, including S. C. Long, General Manager, and G. W. Creighton, General Superintendent, will be heard.

WILSON EXPLAINS REFUSAL.

Does Not Care to Enter Controversy Between Walsh and Rockefeller.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—President Wilson's refusal yesterday to furnish the Industrial Relations Cimmission with copies of correspondence with ex-Governor Ammons of Colorado on the Colorado coal strike, was explained at the White House today with the statement that the President did not care to take any part in the controversy between Chairman Walsh and John D. Rockefeller, Jr., over Mr. Walsh's assertion that an agent of Mr. Rockefeller had written a letter to the President for Governor Ammons to sign.

The President's friends understand he believes the commission should conduct the investigation into industrial relations, for which it was created by Congress, without getting into newspaper controversies. While he has not gone into the merits of the discussion between Mr. Walsh and Mr. Rockefeller, it was said today he thinks the objects of the commission's investigation are apt to be defeated if published attacks on witnesses before the commission are continued.

SOCIAL LIFE IN SIMLA.

Work and Play at India's Great Summer Capital.

The social world of this place is divided into those who are here to work and those who come here to play. Both purposes are fulfilled with the energy of the race. The workers work very hard; the players play to admiration. The workers are, of course, in the majority. They are also an elect, chosen from among the Services for capacity. They are serious people, important people. Experience sits upon them; distinction follows them about. They do not spare themselves. As often as not they begin upon the files before breakfast. Their wives will tell you—always do tell you—the hour at which they leave office. It is they whom the stray arrival from the "Home Civil" addresses when he says: "I had no idea you fellows sweated like this." Looking at them collectively it is difficult to understand why such an assemblage of persons do not stamp the social life of the hill capital with something of their own mind and character, something fine and high and special, not to be found elsewhere. They do not so stamp it. On the contrary, they seem to leave the characterization of Simla society to the world which amuses itself, the stamping to the feet of polo ponies.

This seems a pity, but is understandable from more than one point of view. Officials "senior" enough to be socially influential in Simla have usually served a long, long time in the arid plains below. Duty in India is all-absorbing, there is never too much mind or character to answer its needs. A gradual incrustation of the whole personality takes place about this standard, and an expert psychologist could chip from the surface many things like geniality, perception, power to charm. The chemical action of high ideals upon alien tasks under the Indian sun will sometimes be found to have turned the head of a department into a whited sepulchre of the undergraduate he once was. The mind is less resilient, refuses to react to anything but its "job." Luckily the job remains. Exceptions, of course, there have been, men whose personality has been too vital for the climate and the machine. Sir Denzil Ibbetson was one of them, Sir John Jenkins another. There are even some that are not dead. But the withered eye, for which no oculist can prescribe, is a melancholy feature of Simla. It is an item of the price of empire, probably uncounted.

These, and such as these, are naturally inclined to stand aside while younger and less chastened spirits make the pace and the reputation of Simla. Not that in these days the pace is very rapid or the reputation at all amusing. Lord Kitchener is supposed to have slain any romance that survived Lord Curzon. The hill Captain of today has a pale and serious cast of countenance; Mrs. Hauksbee would hardly recognize him. I have been invited to three missionary "sales of work" in the past week under Viceregal patronage. Three in one week, under the deodars! It is almost too regenerating. No; the old wild days are gone. Nobody bites pieces out of wine glasses now; nobody elopes. Most people are a little older than Cupid. Yet youth, well-conducted youth, rules us still, because in youth only resides the energy and the initiative to do it. That, I imagine, is one reason why such social flavor as our little world has is so incurably bumblepuppy.

But the cuckoo takes account of other things. Every bureaucracy is heir to certain ills, too well known to need diagnosing. A narrowness of outlook, from the nose forever to the pen, an overdeveloped respect for superiors, from the capacity to succeed them and the possibility that somebody else will, a desperate personal sensitiveness, because the sun casts nothing so important as one's own shadow. These things may be bad enough in Petersburg or in Whitehall; here in India they are intensified by isolation. There are no big grievances to measure our little grievances against, no tide of life to forget them in. The Mall on a June morning must be redhot with heartburnings and resentment shed on the way to office. There is no escape from these things; none so thick skinned that he never feels the bruise of unfriendliness or the pinprick of a snub. And no appeal. One might memorialize Providence, but it is ten to one that nothing of that kind would be forwarded under the rules.

It is possible, no doubt, to take the bureaucratic handicap too seriously in estimating the points of society based upon this form of activity, but it must not be left out. Another stone that may be thrown at it with justice is the perfunctoriness with which it invests personal relations. Official designations, not individuals, are asked to dinner to meet other official designations, there being nobody else to invite. Upon any valid estimate of social values, based upon freedom of choice, this would be, in its particular way, one of the most promiscuous of civilized societies, in spite of the fact that practically every member of it is vouched for by his country! It is an odd reflection.

Perhaps, when all is said, it requires very diligent search to find the realities of social life in those remote imperial outposts at all. Too long a row of absentees confronts us on the Mall. Pictures and music, the lecture and the play, all the art and criticism of life we must do without—most of all, the life of the race, that red tide in which we vainly steep our withered persons in the pensioned later years that offer their ironical compensation for all we have foregone. The world's throbbing interests reach us only by paper contact—the attenuated dramas of the files, the daily echoes of Reuter, a Saturday three weeks old. We are truly a little far—we have long been a little far—from the centres of gentleness and gaiety and that poise of the spirit which makes life look, now and then, like a creditable and hapy performance. A little thing happens twice a week which is significant. A flag is run up at the Post Office on Thursday afternoon when the English mail goes out, and on Sunday morning, when the English mail comes in. It is a survival which marks, with a touch of pathos, disabilities that we have not outgrown.—London Telegraph.

MANDATE HASTENED ON FRANK'S MOTION

Handed Down bySupreme Court Without Waiting 30 Days—Expedites Clemency Hearing.

JURORS FOR COMMUTATION

At Least Three Oppose Death Penalty for Farnk—Gov. Slaton Guarantees Impartial Consideration.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—So as to give Leo M. Frank, now under sentence of death in Georgia for the murder of a factory girl in 1913, a definite status in the Georgia courts without further delay, the Supreme Court of the United States today, upon the request of Frank's counsel, issued its mandate sustaining the Federal District Court of Georgia in its refusal to grant to Frank a writ of habeas corpus. Recently, when counsel for the State of Georgia asked that another day be named for Frank's execution, the State court refused to proceed until the Supreme Court's mandate had been received. It is thought that counsel for Frank voluntarily expedited the matter so as to hasten their petition for a commutation of sentence.

The Supreme Court ordinarily issues its mandate thirty days after a dcision, although it is customary, as today, to issue the mandate sooner upon the request of the defeated party. The thirty days will have elapsed on May 19.

Georgia Counsel Surprised.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga., May 5.—The action of Attorney Louis Marshall of New York in asknig the United States Supreme Court to hand down without further delay the mandate in the Leo M. Frank case was a surprise to the local counsel for Frank. Attorney H. A. Alexander, of Frank's counsel, said:

"We have just been notified of the step taken in the Supreme Court. Frank's local counsel were not advised that the reported step was to be taken, but we understand that it was simply to inform the court that counsel for Frank had no mention to apply for a rehearing or to take any other step that might occasion delay, and that so far as they were concerned they had no objection to the mandate issuing at once. Those representing Frank's application before the Prison Commission and the Governor have no desire to hasten or retard the hearing before either the commission or the Governor. They wish, and expect the application to take the usual and ordinary course."

It had been expected that the usual thirty days would elapse between the court's decision and the handing down of the mandate. The present action paves the way for speedy action before the Georgia Prison Commission, and it is likely that Frank's petition for clemency will be passed upon by Governor Slaton before he goes out of office about the middle of June.

As soon as Frank is re-sentenced the Prison Commission, before which his application for executive clemency is pending, will take cognizance of the application and set a date for a hearing. It is expected that the re-sentencing of Frank will occur either next Saturday or Monday.

Because of the bulky record in the case it is understood that the Prison Commission probably will consider it at a special session. Should a special session be called Governor Slaton almost certainly would be called to pass upon the fate of Frank.

The prisoner's lawyers are busy preparing for the hearing. It is understood that the jurors who convicted Frank have been asked to recommend clemency, and it is reported that at least three of them have consented.

Frank's attorneys today obtained an order from Judge Hill turning over to them the affidavits and other documents used in making the motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. The stenographic records of testimony also were procured by the attorneys. The move of procuring this data came as a surprise and was taken in some quarters to forecast an attack on the State's evidence at the hearing before the Prison Commission.

Slaton Guarantees Impartiality.

Governor John M. Slaton of Georgia, who arrived at the Waldorf yesterday afternoon from Atlanta, said:

"When the Supreme Court sends down the mandate the State Court will be called upon to resentence Frank. Then the case will be brought before the Prison Commission, who will investigate for themselves the records and facts, and when this is done the commission can recommend to the Governor pardon, commutation of sentence, or that there be no interference with the court's decree.

"When the case thus passes into the Governor's hands he will consider all the records anew. The recommendations of the commission do not bind the Governor in any way, though they must necessarily have a moral weight. The Governor has absolute power in the final stage of the case.

"The Prison Commission is now in session. The arguments before it will probably be heard the first week in June. Under the law a Judge cannot pass sentence of execution to be carried out in less than twenty days. If that interval does not afford the Prison Commission plenty of time for investigation and consideration it will probably report to me to that effect, and, as a matter of course, I would grant a respite until the case has been thoroughly gone into.

"It must be recognized that in a case like this, or any other that comes to them, the Governor and the Prison Commission are thoroughly impartial, and will do what they think right in view of the record and the evidence. What these last are, I do not know. I have many cases where sentences of execution had been passed come before me, and I have given both sides ample opportunity to be heard. The case of Leo Frank, in that respect, is just like the case of John Smith. The people of the United States can understand that the Governor of Georgia is a big enough man to enforce the law, or on the other hand to extend clemency, and that he will act according to his conscience. What his action will be nobody can state until after the arguments have been made."

Governor Slaton came up to hurry the engraving of Georgia State bonds, which are needed for an early delivery.

"The prospects in Georgia are now fine, and people are very hopeful," he said, in discussing business conditions.

LAST RIPPER KILLING FORETOLD IN LETTER

Leonore Cohn's Mother Warned Two Days Before Charlie Murray Was Murdered.

MORE SUSPECTS ARRESTED

A letter, signed "Jack-the-Ripper," and threatening another murder more brutal than that of her little daughter, Leonore Anna Cohn, last March, which was received last Saturday by Mrs. Anna Cohn, 352 Third Avenue, just two days before little Charles Murray was slain by a ripper in the hallway of his home, 270 First Avenue, has furnished a new clue which the police are following with renewed hopes.

The letter is similar to scurrilous notes written to Mrs. Cohn soon after the murder of her daughter. When the first letters were received they were turned over to the postal authorities, and subsequently Edward Richman, 22 years old, an Austrian, of 433 East 136th Street, was arrested. He will be arraigned today before United States Commissioner Houghton on a charge of misusing the mails.

The letter received by Mrs. Cohn last Saturday was postmarked "New York, May 1, 1915, 7 A. M. Station F." Station F is in Thirty-fourth Street, near Lexington Avenue, not many blocks from the place where Leonore Cohn was murdered. The letter was dated April 30, 1915, and read:

Dear Mrs. Cohn: Just a line to let you know that the person that is accused for writing letters to you is innocent. I am the fellow that wrote you the letters, and as I sade befor a man that heeps his ears and eyes open and mouth shut will always get along and never get caught. Some day thats if I shal ever get the chair I may conffess. But as long as I am out thay can never get me. Kindly give the enclosed letter to the police and tell them that I wrote it. From
H. B. RICHMOND, Jack-the-Ripper.

The letter, which Mrs. Cohn was requested to turn over to the police, was inclosed in another envelope on which was written, "Give this to the police." This letter read:

Why don't you drop this case? You know that man cant get me in 100 years from now so its no youse in sirchen for me. I am a wise guy you know but wise guys never get caught. You may think that I am a fool to write you But am writing just to show that aint afrait Mr. Richmond is incent of the letter which you accuse him for writing to Mrs. Cohn. I am the one that wrote all of tham. As I told you in one of my letters that is gon to be an of the biggest murderes be cometed in N. Y. that was ever nown Now do you see I am troue
JACK-THE-RIPPER

The man in the Tombs who is accused of writing the first letters to Mrs. Cohn was arrested late in the afternoon of April 29 by Acting Captain Gildea and four detectives of the Second Branch, on the complaint of Mrs. Cohn.

Richman's Visitors Watched.

It was learned at Police Headquarters that the prisoner was visited last Friday by a man who they say lives in West Fifty-third Street. When asked if the police were able to account for the movements of this man following his visit to Richman, neither Second Deputy Commissioner Lord nor Inspector Faurot would answer.

A young woman, who said she lived in Sixty-sixth Street, near Third Avenue, visited Richman in the Tombs yesterday, and when she left carried a letter addressed to herself. She and the man who first visited the prisoner are being watched by detectives. Because of the similarity between the name of the letter writer, "Richmond" and the prisoner, Richman, the police ade trying to learn whether the prisoner wrote the last letter to Mrs. Cohn, and, if so, how he got it into the mail. They point out that the letter boasting of a second ripper crime was written on stationery such as may be obtained by prisoners in the Tombs.

The house-to-house search of the neighborhood in which Charles Murray was murdered was continued yesterday. Mamie Murray, the eight-year-old sister of the dead boy; Theresa Louisa Niedig, 247 Avenue B, who was attacked less than fifteen miuutes before Charlie Murray was murdered by a man, who dragged her into a hallway only a few doors from the place of the murder, and a thirteen-year-old girl who was attacked several nights earlier, assisted the detectives in their search. The little girls, accompanied secretly by detectives, walked the streets, hoping to induce the "ripper" to approach them.

In addition, detectives and twenty policemen in plain clothes made inquirles of every householder in the district. They asked particularly about men romers whol did their own washing, and searched every laundry in the neighborhood for bloodstained garments.

Find Stained Knife.

Early yesterday evening Inspector Faurot at Headquarters questioned Michael Tucker, 49 years old, a Slav, who said he had a wife and two children living in Passaic. He was arrested by Patrolmen Kelleher and Woole of the Oak Street Station, who said they saw him annoying children at Water and Oliver Streets. When the patrolmen first noticed him, he was thrusting out his hand in such a manner that they thought he had a knife. Then he beckoned to some children across the street, and put his hand into his pocket.

The patrolmen followed Tucker first to Cherry and then to Roosevelt Street, and when they saw him beckoning to children leaving Public School No. 114, they took charge of him. Kelleher said he asked Tucker what he was doing, and that he answered quickly: "Me no kill boy."

They found a large jack-knife in his pocket, and nothing else but a can of smoking tobacco. At the station they said he again prottsted: "Me no kill anybody; me no kill boy, me no kill girl."

Inspector Faurot examined the knife, and said there were stains on the blade which a superficial test made to appear like blood stains. There were similar stains on the tobacco can.

Tucker told the detectives he had lived recently in a Bowery lodging house, and they took him out to find it.

Detectives arrested several other suspects in the neighborhood of the Murray home yesterday. He was picked up in Stuyvesant Park, where children skating, said he had anoyed them. Another man, taken near First Avenue and Sixteenth Street, had a blood stain on his clothing, which, he explained, was caused by an operation he recently underwent at Bellevue. He showed documentary evidence of the operation, but the police held him until they could make further investigation. Another suspect was arrested near the Williamsburg Bridge plaza, where children who said he had anoyed them, pointed him out to the police.

The funeral of Charlie Murray will take place this afternoon at 2 o'clock, this time having been set so that his little friends attending the kindergarten at St. George's Church, where he was a pupil, may attend. Mgr. Murphy, rector of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, which the Murray family attends, will go to Calvary Cemtery for the final ceremonies.

SONGS OF SERBIANS DONE INTO ENGLISH

Montenegrin National Anthem a Composition of Nicholas I. of That Country.

DR. RYDER'S TRANSLATION

Under the heading "Songs of Serbia" there have been arranged and published with English words for the benefit of the women and children of Serbia the Pan-Slav, the Serbian, and the Montenegrin national anthems. The translations were made by Dr. Maxwell Ryder, and the music can be had by applying to Miss Caroline Dawes Appleton of 133 East Thirty-fifth Street. The Montenegrin hymn was written by King Nicholas I. of that country.

The English translation of the hymns reads:

Pan-Slav Hymn.

HO, SLAVONIANS!

Ho, Slavonian heroes!
Of God's flaming sword the wondrous children!
While this world and life endure,
And while God's hand still sways the thunder,
Stand ye fast, like fortress walls,
Earth's heroes all-prevailing!
Face the hounds of hell against you madly raging—
Slavic rights asserting!
May black night of death engulf the coward traitor
From thy ranks deserting!

Serbian National Hymn.

Lord of hosts, King of all, God of Righteousness,
Thou who from Peril hast saved us,
Hear, O Lord, this our prayer, Mighty Saviour!
Lead Thou us on to Glory and to Thee!
Serbia's King and Serbia's race, uphold Thou still!
Give Thou us strength, vict'ry shall be ours,
Lead Thou, we pray, our life we give,
Give, Serbia to Thee and to our King;
Our destiny is in Thy hand;

Montenegrin Hymn.

ONAM' ONAMO!

Far, far away, beyond the morning star,
Ruined all, yet glorious, still dear to me,
That palace grand our forefathers built,
Stands square up to heav'n to call us to arms.
Still calling, calling, O mighty Prisrend!
Sacred and holy to those I love,
Forefathers, heroes who gave me birth,
To Prisrend's palace, arm'd must I go!

Up to date it is said more than 10,000 copies of the words and music of the Slavic hymns have been sold.

talks he had had with Mr. Barnes to show that as a lieutenant of Platt and leader of Albany County Mr. Barnes was dominant in the Republican Party. The Justice said he would allow the matter to go in, but as showing mitigation only.

"Now," began Mr. Bowers, "I will ask you to state any conversations you had with Mr. Barnes in 1899 or 1900 regarding the nature of a boss and regarding domination by a political machine."

The Colonel said he had had several such conversations, but he couldn't remember the exact dates. Many of them, he said, occurred in the Executive Chamber at Albany, when he was alone with Mr. Barnes or when others were in the room with them.

"I had one such conversation with Mr. Barnes," he said, "on a train between New York and Albany, but I do not remember when it was. One took place a few weeks prior to my appointment of Mr. Payn's successor, because I then told Barnes, after my conversation with Platt in which Platt told me—"

"Let's come down to something you haven't already testified to," interrupted Mr. Bowers. The Colonel looked pained for an instant, but began again:

Barnes's Theories As To Bossism.

"The substance of what I am about to say was told in several conversations I had with Mr. Barnes. He said that it was necessary that the head of a political organization should have complete control of the organization. He instanced Albany County as an example where it was impossible for the riff-raff to take an active part in politics without damage to the community if they were not responsible to a boss or a leader. He said that the riff-raff could not be trusted to handle political affairs; that they would misconduct themselves with regard to property, and that the Government could not go on.

"He said it wasn't necessary ordinarily for the boss to issue orders to the men in the organization, to the Legislators or to other public officials, that they found out for themselves very speedily what was going on. He said if the legislators didn't support the organization they didn't get their bills through, or a nomination, or funds to carry on a campaign if they were nominated. In most cases, Mr. Barnes said, these legislators speedily found out for themselves that it was to their interest to discover what the organization wanted them to do. I remember one particular phrase he used. It was: 'You know yourself, Mr. Roosevelt, that the Senator—meaning Mr. Platt—doesn't bully. He doesn't have to.'

"Mr. Barnes went on to say if a man wanted to go ahead he couldn't do it if he didn't do what the boss wished, but that it wasn't necessary for a boss to give orders. It was sufficient, he said, to have it understood that the man stood by the organization, and if he didn't stand by the organization he got punished. By that he wouldn't get a renomination and in this way he would be eliminated."

The Colonel had worked himself into a fervor. He stuck out his chin as he dwelt on Barnes's name, he leaned toward the Justice and he pounded his fists on the arms of his chair, using all the accompaniments that Mr. Ivins objected to so strenuously several days ago.

Mr. Barnes wanted to know if the witness had any of the same kind of conversations with Barnes after he became President. The Colonel replied that most of the conversations took place after the election of Governor Hughes, either at the White House or at Oyster Bay. It was about the time the Direct Primary bills were being discussed, anyway.

Mr. Barnum objected to any reference to the primary bills, and Justice Andrews told the Colonel to confine his remarks to what Mr. Barnes had said. Not to be daunted, the witness went on:

Direct Primaries Anti-Boss.

"The primary bills had been mentioned in the conversations. Mr. Barnes said the organization had complete control of the Legislature. He said that the effort to pass the primary bills was a general effort to break down party government, and that it was impossible to have party government without bosses. He said that the Democratic and Republican organizations should make common cause against the proposed primary legislation, and that the Legislature could not be allowed to pass the measures, as it would mean the destruction of party government. On one he managed to get it into the record again.

Mr. Bowers then read to the jury an article from The New oYrk World of May 4, 1913, in which mention was made of the Murphy and Barnes machines, and it was asserted that a perfect understanding and harmony existed between them. Still another article, telling of a combination of the two machines for the purpose of blocking legislation, was read. Mr. Bowers's purpose was to show that the articles influenced the Colonel's mind when he penned the alleged libel.

The lawyer wanted to know next if Mr. Roosevelt had read anything about a man named McCabe, who, he said, was at one time head of the Democratic Party in Albany.

"That," interposed Justice Andrews, "gets us back to the old question of local political matters in Albany which I have ruled out as not having any bearing either upon mitigation or justification. It is a very serious question and Mr. Ivins ought to be here."

"I believe your ruling was wrong," said Mr. Bowers, "and I would like to have the opportunity of arguing the matter now."

It was finally agreed that the court should wait for Mr. Ivins, and the Justice then asked Mr. Barnum if he cared to cross-examine the witness. Mr. Barnum asked that the cross-examination be reserved until tomorrow morning. The Justice consented.

Albany Journal Stockholders.

As soon as court opened this morning, the Roosevelt counsel took up the Albany printing matter. Mr. Ivins at the start agreed to stipulate that the session laws for 190 o 1904, inclusive, were printed only once each day during each year in The Albany Evening Journal, although the Journal was designated both as the "State" and the "County" paper, and that, while The Journal was paid both by the State and the County to publish the session laws, thus providing for two publications, the type was set up and printed only once each day.

"I agree to a stipulation," said Mr. Ivins, "that his statement is true, but I object because it is irrevelant."

The objection was overruled and the stipulation was read. Then Mr. Bowers read into the record the names of the stockholders of The Albany Evening Journal from 1897 to 1914. The list showed that the Barnes family had control of the paper, holding a majority of both common and preferred stock. There were 1,000 common and 600 preferred shares. William Barnes held 801 common and 28 preferred. Harry I. Barnes, Thurlow Weed Barnes, Grace Davis Barnes, Harriet L. Barnes and Mrs. David were the other members of the Barnes family holding stock, mostly preferred.

Other stockholders named were Chauncey M. Depew, Levi P. Morton, J. B. Lyon, the J. B. Lyon Printing Company, Oliver W. Quayle, Nathaniel Elsberg, R. C. Prun, Charles D. Hilles and Anthony N. Brady.

William J. Mussbaum, who had examined the books of the Journal Company, was called to testify as to the nature of the examination he had made. Mr. Bowers explained that he was attempting to show that on job printing contracts certain sums were paid to the Journal Company as commissions by the J. B. Lyon and Argus companies. Mr. Ivins objected. The court said that while similar evidence had been submited already, it was doubtful whether the books of a corporation were admissible as evidence without proof being brought to show that the plaintiff was aware of such payments.

"The mere fact that Mr. Barnes is an officer or Director of the company does not necessarily charge him with knowledge of the entries on the books of the corporation," said Justice Andrews.

"We are going to offer in evidence also the private account of Mr. Barnes to show that he had knowledge of it," said Mr. Bowers.

"Have you any officer of the company—a General Manager, Treasurer, or head bookkeeper—who can give responsible evidence on this point?" the court asked the Barnes counsel.

"No one is forthcoming," said Mr. Ivins. "Mr. Lindsay, the general manager, is dead, and the bookkeeper who was with the company for several years is no longer in its employ and cannot be located."

Barnes's Private Account.

Mr. Bowers said that he expected to be able t oshow that the surplus on the profit and loss account was transferred to Mr. Barnes's private account, and that, under the by-laws of the concern, hi sduties were such that inevitably he occasion Mr. Barnes said that the people could not be trusted to govern themselves and that they could not do without bosses."

The Colonel had made this remark by Mr. Barnes one of the points of his testimony when first on the stand, and now must have had knowledge of the details of the business.

It was an important point for the Roosevelt forces, for unless they could show that Mr. Barnes had knowledge of the commissions paid to the Journal company, he might not be held to be responsible for the acts of his subordinates. The Barnes forces have maintained that Mr. Barnes had no knowl edge of what was going on, and they have fought strenuously against his private accounts being admitted in evidence.

Addressing Mr. Bowers, Justice Andrews said:

"Your argument is that in the first place Mr. Barnes had supervision of the company, with the power to discharge employes, and that it was his duty to countersign checks, so that he must have seen all statements that came to the company; that he had a personal account in which he was credited with salary, cash, &c., from profits derived by the company, and that various sums drawn out by him were charged against his account, and that, therefore, to see that he was properly credited, he must have had knowledge of entries in the books of th company?

"Take any stockholder of any company; on the ledger he is credited with dividends and charged with various expenditures made for him; is he therefore charged with knowledge of all the entries of the books of the company in order to be sure that he was properly charged?"

Mr. Bowers replied that it would have been not only his duty but also his pleasure to see that the books were properly kept and the accounts made straight.

"Why wouldn't that apply equally to every stockholder?" asked the court.

"It would if he took his dividends," Mr. Bowers replied.

The court asked counsel to submit authorities on the question before the opening of the afternoon session and to suspend examination along that line for the time being.

Thousands Paid in Commissions.

Charles M. Winchester, Vice President of the J. B. Lyon Company, who had been on the stand several times, was recalled. He admitted that there was an account on the books of the J. B. Lyon Company showing payments made to his company by The Journal Company.

"When you did a piece of work for The Journal Company, for which you paid a commission, did you pay by check or by cash, or did you allow a deduction?" asked Mr. Bowers.

The witness said payment was made in different ways. Mr. Bowers then tried to find out just how much in commissions was paid to The Journal Company.

Q.—Did you ever pay as large a sum at once as $3,280.39? A.—Yes.

Q.—Ever pay as much as $14,000 for commission? A.—That was when I bought Mr. Barnes's (Lyon Company) stock and paid him $14,000 in cash and the rest in notes.

Q.—Did you pay as large a sum as that to the Journal in 1906? A.—I was not in the main branch of the Lyon Company at that time.

Q.—But you were general manager of the company? A.—Yes.

Q.—Was part of that Statework? A.—Yes.

Q.—And part of it county work, and again city work? A.—Yes.

Q.—And you billed the Journal Company for that work? A.—Usually—not always.

Q.—Why didn't you bill the State? A.—Any man who brings business to the J. B. Lyon Company gets a commission on it.

"If the Journal brought you business from the City of Albany or the State, and you billed the State, would you pay the Journal a commission?"

"I would like to explain that point."

"You may answer 'Yes' or 'No,' or say 'I can't answer,'" directed the court.

"I can't answer," said Mr. Winchester.

While it was not brought out today that the Journal Company received as much as $14,000 in 1906 for work it had turned over to the Lyon Company, Mr. Bowers hopes to be able to prove it later.

The witness said that at different times the Journal Company had brought to the Lyon Company work for both the State and the City of Albany, for which it had received a commission.

Q.—Will your books show these transactions? A.—I expect that they will.

Q.—Did you ever pay to or eceive from Mr. Barnes or the Journal Company any money not entered on your books? A.—No.

The witness said that the settlements with the Journal Company for work done for it were made once a year. He said he did business in his Journal dealings with Mr. Lindsay, now dead, and with a Mr. Fisher, who has left that company's employ.

Mr. Bowers directed the witness to produce all the ledgers and day books relating to the legislative printing, as well as all check stubs, vouchers, &c., showing payments to the Journal Company.

No Contract Talks with Barnes.

Mr. Barnum then took Mr. Winchester in hand for cross-examination. He asked if the McCarthy contract, which was discussed in the Barnes-Platt letters, had been assigned to the J. B. Lyon Company or to James B. Lyon individually. The witness said Mr. Lyon got it himself.

"Did Mr. Barnes ever come to you or talk with you about the McCarthy contarct?"

"Never in his life, or about any other contract."

The witness said he had a list of all the contracts awarded to the J. B. Lyon Company by the State for legislative and departmental printing from 1896 to date. He produced a list, and read the years in which contracts had been held by the Lyon company, and those in which they had been awarded to the Brandow Company, the Argus Company, Oliver A. Quayle, and others. In some instances, Mr. Winchester said, the printing had been leased or assigned to the Lon company. The Brandow Company, he said, and usually the Argus Company, did their work in their own plants. Sometimes, however, the Argus had called upon the Lyon company for assistance.

Q.—In certain years, when the contract was in other hands, you did none of the work? A.—No.

Q.—Have you any recollection of Mr. Barnes having used his influence with the Legislature to obtain public printing for the J. B. Lyon Company? A.—No.

Q.—Did you have absolute charge of all the printing contracts? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did Mr. Barnes ever talk with you in regard to charges that were to be made against the State for printing? A.—Never.

Q.—How many jobs have been given you since 1896 for departmental and legislative printing? A.—About 15,000 each year for departmental and from 200 to 300 for legislative printing.

The witness, on redirect examination, said that during the year 1914 the Lyon Company did business amounting to $1,300,000, of which $304,000 was commercial, that is, miscellaneous, including county and city printing, and of which $849,000 was legislative and departmental.

Michael V. Dolan of the Argus Company, recalled, told about the custom of keeping standing the type used for the printing of Common Council proceedings so that it could be used in printing the reports at the end of the year, thus saving the resetting of the type.

Edward T. Platt, recalled, was asked to explain why he had not brought all the Platt-Roosevelt letters called for in the first subpoena. He explained that they had been cross-indexed under "Roosevelt" and "President," and he could find only the "Roosevelt" files at first.

"I am not going to offer any of these letters in evidence," said Mr. Barnum, "nor read them to the jury. I just wanted to have it explained why they were not produced before."

The witness said that there were 353 letters in all, that 160 were from Roosevelt to Platt and 193 from Platt to Roosevelt, and that they covered the period from 1899 to 1909.

Hotchkiss Tells of Waste.

The first witness at the afternoon session was William H. Hotchkiss, ex-Superintendent of Insurance and ex-State Chairman of the Progressive Party. He said he made an investigation of the State Insurance office with regard to the printing of records in the early part of 1910. He pointed out that there was a provision in the law in 1908 requiring the printing of 4,000 copies of the annual report of the department and an extra 2,000 for distribution among lawyers and insurance companies, making 6,000 sets in all, or 30,000 books. When the witness was asked if he had taken any action in 1910 to have this arrangement changed the court asked Stewart F. Hancock, who was conducting the examination, what he expected to show.

"I expect to show," the lawyer replied, "that the State published 33 1-3 per cent. more copies of the report than it had use for, and that it was a waste and gave undue profit to the printers. I will also show that Mr. Hotchkiss tried to have the law amended so as to save the State's money—that he tried to get legislative bills passed; also that he tried to persuade the J. B. Lyon Company not to print the extra sets, but that the company refused to comply. I expect to show by Senator Burd, who was Chairman of the Senate Committee on Printing, that it was impossible to get the necessary legislation through the Legislature."

Mr. Hotchkiss was then allowed to proceed.

"In 1910," he said, "we were getting at least 1,000 more sets of the report than we needed. They wer heaped up in a room in th attic of the Capitol. In 1911 there was a surplus of at least 1,500 copies, and the next year there were 2,000, or 10,000 books lef tover.

Mr. Hancock tried to get into the ree ord a letter the witness had written to Senator Burd, and in the argument that followed said: "I expect to prove that the Barnes influence was responsible for this great waste in printing."

The letter was excluded, but Mr. Hotchkiss was allowed to tell about a bill he had prepared and given to Senator Burd.

"Was the bill ever introduced?" the witness was asked.

"No," he replied. "Senator Burd said he couldn't get it out of the committee."

The witness said that Mr. Burd, shortly after that, told him he couldn't do anything to help him, as he couldn't get the bills out of his own committee.

Reform Always Sidetracked.

The witness then told how he had corresponded with the officials of the Lyon Company and how they had refused to cut down the number of books.

In 1912, the witness said, he prepared another bill reducing the number of printed reports needed from 4,000 to 2,000.

"Do you know what happened to that bill?" asked Mr. Hancock.

"Yes," replied the witness. "The bill was modified and became a law. The State printing law still required that 4,000 copies of the report be printed, however, and that number continued to be printed."

In 1913, Mr. Hotchkiss said, he tried again with another bill to reduce the number of copies to be printed from 4,000 to 2,000, but it was referred to the Senate Printing Committee and died there.

There was no cross-examination of the witness.

Mr. Bowers then took up the question of having the private books of Mr. Barnes examined. The argument went on for half an hour, when Michael V. Dolan, of the Argus Company, was recalled, and asked about payments he had made to the Journal Company for printing concessions.

"Did you in 1912 make a discount on the city work the Journal Company brought to you?" he was asked.

"I did," was the reply. After examining several ledgers the witness testified that such discounts were continued up to 1915.

Colonel Roosevelt was here recalled. After he had testified for half an hour Justice Andrews announced an adjournment until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

SUFFRAGISTS PLEAD FOR A FREE FIELD

WANT THE FIGHT CLEAN CUT

Mrs. Blatch Proposes Plan to Solve Puzzle—Insists That Women Must Have Fair Play.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 5.—Advocates of woman suffrage served notice on the Constitutional Convention today that it must do nothing to interfere with a fair and unequivocal decision on the question by the voters at the polls this Fall. The ultimatum was delivered at a meeting of the Suffrage Committee held in the Senate Chamber for the purpose of hearing arguments on a resolution introduced by Herbert Parsons, committing the convention to the "hands off" policy.

A bare quorum of the committee was in attendance. Patrick W. Cullinan of Oswego, the Chairman, presided. A score of suffragists appeared to urge the adoption of the Parsons resolution, or some other resolution along similar lines. There were some women representing the "anti" movement in attendance, too, but they did not demand an opportunity to be heard. As a matter of fact the "antis" also want the question submitted to a referendum.

In speaking on his resolution Mr. Parsons said: "I have no pride of authorship. If any person can suggest a measure that will be an improvement upon my resolution I am quite willing to accept it. But if not, then I urge that my resolution be adopted without delay."

The Parsons resolution provides for three things. In the first place its adoption would pledge the Constitutional Convention to ignore the suffrage question. In the second place it would bind the convention to do no tinkering with Section 1, Article II, of the Constitution, which defines the qualifications of voters. In the third place it calls for the separate submission of the women suffrage amendment, on which two successive Legislatures have acted favorably, in accord with the wishes of the woman suffrage advocates, and the separate submission also of any other amendments to the suffrage clause of the constitution.

"Such action, said Mr. Parsons, "is necessary owing to the Constitutional necessity that any action by the Constitutional Convention ratified by the voters would supercede the amendment voted on by the Legislature, even though this was ratified too."

Mrs. Blatch's Argument.

Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch, representing the Woman's Political Union, said that no amendment providing for Woman's suffrage should be submitted by the Constitutional Convention. The matter should be left to a referendum.

"Both the Republican and the Democratic State platform declared that the suffrage amendment should be submitted either by the Legislature or by the Constitutional Convention," said Mrs. Blatch. "In neither platform was there a suggestion that the amendment should be submitted both by the Legislature and the Constitutional Convention.

"Undoubtedly these definite declarations on the part of both parties were based upon knowledge of certain Constitutional complications which would arise were another course adopted, and on most honorable determination among the leaders of both parties to avoid jeopardizing a simple and unequivocal referendum on woman suffrage at the general election.

"In the Constitution of the State of Ne wYork there is a definite regulation of amendments submitted coincidently by the Legislature and a Constitutional Convention. I refer to Article XIV, Section 3, which says:

"'Any amendment proposed by a Constitutional Convention relating to the same subject as an amendment proposed by the Legislature, coincidently submitted to the people for approval at the general election held in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety four or at any subsequent election, shall, if approved, be deemed to supersede the amendment so proposed by the Legislature.

"Were the Constitutional Convention to submit to the voters a woman suffrage amendment, such recommendation would not supplant that of the Legislature on the ballot, but both would appear with it causing obvious confusion.

"I feel full confidence that this committee will recommend the reporting to the Convention such a course of action as will not complicate the woman suffrage referendum by placing before the voters a second amendment, but will allow the amendment which has passed the Legislature to stand as the sole recommendation before the electorate on the question of extending suffrage to women.

"The problem before you of safeguarding the interests of our amendment and yet at the same time leaving the convention free to offer other than suffrage amendments to Section 1, Article II. is not difficult. The Constitutional Convention of 1894 set a precedent which can be followed. The revised constitution with the exception of Section 1, Article II. could be submitted in one ballot, and in a separate ballot the amendments coming from the convention to that excepted section could be presented. The legislative suffrage amendment would then stand alone on perfectly sound ground. Each amendment to Section 1, Article II. would be judged on its merits and would live or die according to its own carrying power.

"Perhaps no committee in the convention has a piece of work more important than this which falsi to you, of defining the relation of the convention, as Senator Rot says, to the suffrage amendment. In your work we feel sure you will be prompted by the desire to secure a referendum which cannot be challenged on the most important question which has ever come before the electorate of this State for decision."

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, the next speaker, said that there existed an alarming difference of opinion among lawyers as to how to avoid conflicting action.

"I have been told," said Mrs. Catt, "that if the amendment adopted by the Legislature should be ratified, a legal question might arise even though the Constitutional Convention had taken no action to duplicate or conflict with the amendment we want submitted. I have been assured, though, that the Constitutional Convention could go on record by adopting an order making the resolution adopted by the Legislature giving women the ballot a part of the Constitution, provided it was ratified at the polls.

Asks for a "Square Deal."

"One thing, however, I would like to emphasize. We do not want the Constitutional Convention to amend the suffrage clause in any way that will affect women's right to vote. We ask you for a square deal, and for nothing else."

The last appeal was made by Mrs. Edward Everett Hale, wife of Professor Hale of Union College.

"I am unaccustomed to speaking, and I know nothing about politics," said Mrs. Hale. "I want to give you the view of the plain woman on this matter. For years and years you have kept us in the nursery of the Judiciary Committee. Now you are letting us come down and take our dinner with you in the two houses of the Legislature. We feel that this is our coming-out party, and we are just as excited over it as a young girl would be over her first ball.

"We women have a great deal of respect for politics. You men, so to speak, are our Godfathers in politics. We must take our political morality from you. Just remember that, and that the best proof of your political morality is the keeping of your pledges to us who must depend upon you to do us justice in this matter of the ballot."

Mrs. Blatch said, after the hearing, that she and her sisters in the suffrage cause felt no apprehension with regard to the intentions of the Constitutional Convention or the good faith of either political party.

"The only alarm we feel," she said, "is because of the somewhat complex problem arising in connection with the form in which this question should be submitted so as to avoid confusion or the splitting of the vote or legal complications afterward."

It was learned tonight that William Barnes is the chief advocate of an educational qualification for the right to vote, and that the Honest Ballot Association, through Herbert Parsons, expects to offer an amendment increasing from thirty to sixty days the period of residence of an elector in an election district in order to have the right to vote.

ROOT OFFERS PRAYER.

Opens Constitutional Convention in Absence of Clergyman.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 5.—When the Constitutional Convention met this morning the clergyman who had been selected to offer the opening prayer was not present.

"The arrangement under which a clergyman was to appear here and open the session with prayer seems in some way to have failed," said President Root, when he ascended the rostrum.

Everybody was expecting the usual direction to the clerk to read the minutes of the preceding session, but Senator Root folded his hands, and with bowed head, offered prayer as follows:

"Almighty God, we pray Thee to guide our deliberations this day. Make us humble, sincere, devoted to the public service. Make us wise, considerate of the feelings and the opinions and the rights of others. Make us effective and useful for the advancement of Thy cause of peace and justice and liberty in the world. For Christ's sake. Amen."

TO REFORM SINKING FUNDS.

Wagner Proposes Plan to Lighten Tax Burden.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 5.—Senator Robert F. Wagner introduced in the Constitutional Convention today two amendments to Article VII. of the Constitution, which deals with the manner of creating and maintaining the sinking funds for the amortization of the bonded indebtedness of the State. If some of the existing sinking funds there is now a vast surplus, owing to faulty methods of financing, and it was chiefly to correct this condition that the amendments were offered.

One amendment provides that t he highway sinking fund shall contain at the end of each year of the life of any highway bond issued one-fiftieth of the face value of such bond for each year it has been issued. The highway bonds run for fifty years. The amendment provides that any surplus now existing or which is created hereafter in the highway sinking funds shall be used to reduce the annual contribution to the sinking fund in succeeding years.

The other amendment provides that the ratio between the funds in the sinking fund at the end of each year and the face value of the bonds shall be equal to the ratio between the number of years elapsed since the issuance of the bonds to the total number of years for which they were issued.

"It is a matter of public knowledge that a large amount of money is tied up in those sinking funds in excess of the amount which should have been provided year by year for the redemption of the bonds," Senator Wagner said today. "This excess is due to blunders of the past.

"The only purpose of a sinking fund is to afford a prompt payment of het interest upon the bonds and to insure the maintenance of a sinking fund which will be sufficient to pay the bonds when they mature. The Legislature for some reason provided sinking funds which are today more than $30,000,000 in excess of the requirement."

Senator Wagner's amendments would relieve the people from the unnecessary burden of taxation imposed by the present system.

Senator Wagner also introduced a resolution requesting the State Controller to inform the convention of the exact amount of bonds issued by the State for highway and canal purposes and the present condition of the sinking funds for the redemption of the bonds.

Senator James A. Foley of New York introduced an amendment for a new section, to be inserted in Article V., which would make the Public Service Commissioners constitutional officers and thus immune from molestation for political reasons.

Mark Eisner, Democrat of New York, introduced an amendment which would include moving picture shows in the clause of the Constitution which now safeguards the freedom of the press.

Ray B. Smith, Republican of Onondaga, presented a proposal which would render the tenure of all officers appointed by the Governor co-terminous with the Governor's own tenure of office. Another amendment offered by Mr. Smith would make three-fifths instead of a majority a quorum in either house of the Legislature on the final passage of bills.

WHITMAN MAY KILL THE POST ROAD BILL

SUGGESTS ALTERNATE PLAN

May Make Road a State Highway—Village Officials Urge the Slater Measure.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 5.—After a public hearing on the Slater-Law bill, which would permit the laying of trolley tracks on the Albany Post Road, between Hastings and Ossinning, Governor Whitman said tonight that he either would veto that bill, or if he approved it, at the same time would approve the Hewitt bill, which would make that thoroughfare a State highway, in which case the sanction of the Highway Commissioner would be necessary before a trolley line could be constructed on it.

The bill, which is before the Governor for final action, has been opposed for years by the residents of Westchester County who have valuable estates along the historic turnpike. The bill has been before the Legislature since 197. It provides for the repeal of the so-called Burns law, prohibiting the laying of trolley tracks on that section of the Post Rroad, which is situated between Hastings and Ossinning. The Burns law was passed in 1896.

Again and again while the hearing was in progress, Governor Whitman indicated that he was in thorough sympathy with the plan to keep this stretch of road free of cars, but he thought this purpose could be accomplished by making it a State highway and without retaining on the statute books legislation which he appeared to regard as "special."

The bill was opposed at the hearing by men representing residents of the district affected by representatives of the Automobile Association of America, and the Automobile Club. Officials representing a number of villages along the route of the post road appeared to advocate the measure. They said that sentiment in Westchester County was overwhelmingly in favor of the bill, and submitted results of straw votes in support of their contention.

Courtland Smith of Dobbs Ferry, was the first to speak in opposition to the bill. He said the historic old highway should be kept free from encroachment by the trolley.

"The residents in the section of Westchester county along the Post Road where it is protected through the Burns law," he said, "have spent enormous sums of money in improving their estates because of protection afforded by the present law. It would be a breach of faith on the part of the State if this bill were to become law."

Paul N. Hayes of Scarborough spoke in a similar vein. He gave way to Frederick R. Toombs, a former Assemblyman, who said he was authorized to protest against the bill iby the Automobile Association. He filed a petition signed by 2,100 members of that association. Nelle Townsend, representing the Automobile Club, was the last speaker in opposition to the bill.

"I urge that it would be vandalism to permit trolley tracks on this historic old highway," he said.

"I quite agree with you," said the Governor, "but it is a question in my mind if the signing of the bill making the road a State highway would not provide the necessary protection. I do not know what to think regarding the propriety of a law affording an exemption for a short stretch of road after the manner of the Burns law and the wisdom of letting it remain on the statute books."

"We have not always had as good a Highway Commissioner as we have now," said Mr. Towner.

"There is a great deal in what you have said," said the Governor, with a smile.

Senator Slater, in advocating the bill, said that he introduced it because of a straw vote taken in the communities affected, which showed strong sentiment for the repeal of the Burns act.

"There were 3,066 votes in favor of demolishing the Chinese wall, which has been erected around this road by the Burns law to 767 against the proposition," said the Senator. "I contend that even with my bill signed, there would be ample protection. There would be four hurdles for any trolley concern to negotiate before it could obtain a footing on the Post Road. One would be the consent of the property owners, a second the permission of the villages along the route, a third the permit of the Public Service Commission, and a fourth the sanction of the Highways Commissioner. I maintain that all these four obstacles could not be overcome unless some really vital necessity with public sentiment behind it existed."

Assemblyman Walter W. Law of Westchester; Frank Pierson, President of the village of Tarrytown; Charles E. Milliard, a supervisor of the town of Greenburg; John F. Jenkins, supervisor of Ossining; Hugh Thornton of Dobbs Ferry, and Vice President Forsyth of the Westchester Board of Supervisors also urged the Governor to approve the bill.

TO SIGN OUSTER BILL.

Whitman Likely to Approve Industrial Commission Plan.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 5.—Representatives of labor organizations, at a hearing before Governor Whitman today, opposed the Spring bill establishing an Industrial Commission of three members, to take the place of the Labor Department and the Workmen's Compensation Commission. The labor men attacked principally the clause of the bill providing for court review of orders of the new commission. They asserted that this provision would result in delays in enforcing the laws.

"It is possible," the Governor agreed, "that this clause may open the door to delays too widely."

Commissioner of Labor Lynch, in opposing the measure, characterized it as "a most cumbersome engine, wonderfully evolved out of theoretical minds, for delaying the enforcement of the law."

James Hanley, the labor legislative agent, introduced a dozen representatives of labor organsiations, including Thomas V. O'Connor of Buffalo, a delegate to the Constitutional Convention, who represented the longshoremen. James Cunningham, counsel for the Labor Department, one of the speakers, asserted that the rider in the bill which provides for an Advisory Board, would nullify all of the labor laws of the State. Thomas R. Parkinson, who if was asserted, drew up the bill, denied this, saying he made administrative changes only, and that it was in line with the laws in other States.

Governor Whitman after the hearing indicated that he would sign the bill. He also let it be inferred that if the measure became a law he would appoint Labor Commissioner Lynch and John Mitchell, a Compensation Commissioner, as members of the new commission. J. Mayhew Wainwright, who resigned as a Compensation Commissioner early in the Whitman administration, is another prospective appointee.

MAY VETO AUTO BILL.

Errors, Government Hears, Would Cost State $1,500,000.

ALBANY, May 5.—Governor Whitman today gave a hearing on the Hewitt bill, to increase the tax on motor vehicles, and place a $2 tax on motor cycles. He was informed that the measure, which was drawn by Republican leaders in the final days of the session, in its present form, would cause a loss of $1,500,000 a year to the States. Errors were made in the rush to get the measure through the Legislature.

Charles Terry, representing automobile dealers, told the Governor that the bill would exempt from taxation all motor vehicles which had been registered once, but not motor cycles. Such exemption, he said, would cause a loss of more than $1,500,000 a year in re-registration fees. The exemption, he explained, had come about by the insertion of the words "motor cycles" in the section providing for re-registration, and the neglect of the authors of the bill specifically to mention "other motor vehicles."

"If that proves to be the case," the Governor said, "I shall veto the bill. Otherwise, I think I ought to sign it."

$300,000 IN LEGACIES DIVIDED.

Public Bequests of Catherine Reilly Shown in Appraisal.

The exact amounts, aggregating approximately $300,000, bequeathed to religious and charitable institutions under the will of Catherine Reilly, who died at her home at 255 West 138th Street, on May 5, 1913, were disclosed yesterday when the appraisal of the estate was filed in the office of the State Controller.

The report shows the following bequests: Little Sisters of the Poor, $31,787; Xavier Free Publication Society for the Blind, $27787; St. Joseph's Seminary, $51,787; Seton Hospital for Consumptives, Holy Name Mission for the Bowery District, and St. Malachy's Home for Children, $26,787 each; the Association for Befriending Children and Young Girls, Sisters of the Poor of St. Francis, the Roman Catholic Church of St. Ann, the Servants of Relief for Incurable Cancer, St. Agnes Hospital, the Mission of the Immaculate Virgin, Grace Institute, and the Misericordia Hospital, $5,000 each; the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum, $10,000, and St. Patrick's Cathedral, $2,000.

There were fifty-three bequests in all, including $10,000 to Jennie Dorny, and $5,000 each to Kate McCormick and Mary Fay, friends of the testator.

Racing Receipts for Relief Funds.

The Westchester Racing Association has consented to donate a portion of its receipts of the opening day at Belmont Park, may 20, when the metropolitan racing season will start, to the Lafayette Fund, the Committee of Mercy, and the Blue Cross Association. These members of these three prominent war relief organizations are busily at work maturing their plans to make of this occasion a memorable success. Extra boxes are to be added for the opening day, so that there will be a hundred of them available. A number of the boxes already have been sold. Among those who have purchased them are Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, August Belmont, Harry Payne Whitney, Mrs. P. Cooper Hewitt, Oliver Harriman, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., C. K. G. Billings, Payne Whitney, Frederick Vanderbilt, Mrs. Newbold LeRoy Edgar, Henry W. Marsh, Barron Andrews, John Magee, Gifford A. Cochran, Schuyler L. Parsons, James Butler, R. T. Wilson, Captain E. B. SAFFORD GUILTY, LAWYERS IN FIGHT of the jury remaining in the District Attorney's office with Mr. Wood, Mr. Hershenstein, and several other officials.

Mr. Wood did not make a formal statement after his encounter with Mr. Slade, but he denied striking the lawyer. He said that the lawyer had asked him what he considered an insulting question, and that he had ordered Mr. Slade out of the room. Assistant District Attorney Hershenstein and other witnesses also said that they did not see Mr. Wood strike Mr. Slade. It was admitted by most of the spectators that the two men had struck at each other, but it was asserted that none of the blows landed.

In the excitement immediately following the wrangle, when the court officers were trying to restore order, some one shouted, "Look out, some of those fellows carry guns," and apprehension of further trouble increased the uproar. But, as far as could be observed, no weapons were drawn.

Judge Hough told the jury before dismissing them that he would give their recommendation for leniency serious consideration. He then remanded Safford to the Tombs for sentence next Monday morning at 10:15 o'clock.

The jury retired with the case at 11:38 in the morning, and at 9:45 at night announced that a verdict had been agreed upon. They had taken out two hours for meals, so their deliberations consumed eight hours and twelve minutes. There was a rumor that one man had deadlocked the jury for that time, but the foreman stated after the verdict that all of the evidence in the case had been gone over carefully, and that this had required the eight hours and more. Judge Hough had gone home when the jury announced its readiness to report, so he had to be notified by telephone. It was 10:30 o'clock before he had taken his place on the bench.

Rae Tanzer's Trial Next.

Assistant District Attorney Hershenstein said late last night that the next prosecution in the Tanzer-Osborne ease would be that of Rae Tanzer for perjury committed at Safford's trial. She is under indictment for using the mails to defraud James W. Osborne, but the Federal authorities have her sworn statement that Mr. Osborne was not the man she knew as Oliver Osborne and with this they have her recent testimony that she was the man. An indictment for perjury, Mr. Hershenstein said, would be based on her testimony.

Miss Tanzer was not in the courtroom whe nthe verdict was returned. The only women present, who were close at hand in the encounter between Mr. Wood and Mr. Slade, were two whose identity was not learned.

When court opened in the morning, Judge Hough began his charge, in which he gave a resume of Rae Tanzer's story that to many established its own improbability. He first instructed the jury regarding the law in the case, saying particularly that the jurors must determine, first, whether Safford told the truth, and second, if he did not tell the truth, whether he knew this fact when he testified. The Judge characterized "a reasonable doubt" as a "doubt based on reason, not on kindness nor intellectual laziness," and he warned the jurors against attempting to examine the evidence from a legal point of view.

"Simply use the common sense God has given you," he explained.

Judge Hough said that one of the first questions to be considered by the jurors was the truth or falsity of Rae Tanzers' sszz sstozrzy.

"The truth of any allegation of fact," he said, "may be judged from two viewpoints: first, what is the inherent probability of the story told? and, second, what is the evidence for and against the tale told?"

Judge Hough's Advice.

"Let us consider," he continued, "the stories of the Tanzers and of Safford, so far as the two go together, in respect of inherent probability."

Judge Hough dwelt on the dangers of entanglements with women "to pocket, to reputation, and sometimes even to life." He heclared that one important question always was, What price would a man or woman probably pay to get what either wanted?

"Now apply these general reflections to the Tanzer story," he said. "We have shown to us a lawyer whose time is much occupied, who has been by counsel on both sides described as distinknown, professionally and politically, than are most of the members of my profession—a lawyer, who if not old, is elderly as 50, who is married, who has a son 17 years old. Such a man meets on the street a woman of 24, possessed of that degree of physical attraction that you have had an opportunity of seeing, speaking in the unlearned, if not the illiterate manner you may perhaps have noticed, and dwelling with three sisters in a remote portion of the city.

So inflammed is this elderly man that he took off his spectacles, without which his vision is defective, and he adorned himself with diamonds apparently on general principles; he accompanies his easy conquest to her Bronx home to take her on this Sunday excursion to Plainfield. He then promises marriage, though at what time and under what circumstances the celebration is to take place, we are not told—a promise incapable of fulfillment without bigamy, unless prefaced by a divorce, and he gives to his chance companion his genuine family name.

"Having thus done a number of things which most men would pronounce incautious, to say the least, before arriving at Plainfield, he struts about the hotel lobby in such manner as to impress Kitchen, Safford, and Lapp with his existence and importance. And all for what? From this evidence, the inference may be drawn—though this of course is for you to decide—that the talk about buying land and living in Plainfield seems to have been uttered solely to enable the man and woman without baggage to get the use of a room. The trick, if it was one, succeeded. And then this elderly, busy lawyer, sneaks off, having registered by his real last name.

"Now content with this expedition, this elderly gentleman parades the woman in the next few weeks and travels with her in public streets and cars in this city unmindful or reckless of the possible effect on an observer's eye of the extraordinary diminutive stature of Rae Tanzer.

Visits to the Tanzer Flat.

"Indeed, so attentive was he that during October, November, and into the early part of December, evenings were spent by this man at the Tanzer flat—meals taken with the sisters, a proceeding apparently decorously dull, for you will recollect that Rae Tanzer was only prevented from going with Oliver Osborne on the night boat to Albany by the difficulty of explaining such nocturnal absence to her sisters, before whom, apparently, the proprieties were to be observed. And then the last scene of this eventful history, the lawyer who ought to have been acquainted with the dangers, the expense, the general possibilities of * * * litigation in this State and city, drops the woman and continues to try to live his usual life in the community that contains this woman scorned.

"Whether you see the story that way is for you. If you do, or however you see it, you are asked: Do you think that this is a likely, probable, natural story? You are asked: Does it seem likely that such an elderly man would surely have to pay seem a little high? And, finally, you are asked: Does James W. Osborne seem to be the kind of man who would probably, if bad enough, be fool enough to do what this story attributes to him?"

In discussing the second viewpoint, that of positive evidence, Judge Hough said that considering the evidence of the visit to Plainfield, the testimony of Rae Tanzer and Safford stood opposed to that of James W. Osborne, Kitchen, and Lapp. He said that the testimony of Rae Tanzer and Mr. Osborne might be canceled, and that there remained the testimony against that of Kitchen and Lapp. The jury, he said, must determine which of this testimony was true.

Judge Hough drew attention to the fact that the testimony of the witnesses for the prosecution was supported by alibis. He made no allusion to the testimony of James W. Osborne to the effect that Oliver Osborne called upon him at the Sherman Square Hotel and confessed that he was the O. Osborne who knew Rae Tanzer. Judge Hough made no point one way or the other of the fact that the whereabouts of Oliver Osborne were not known to any one connected with the case.

The maximum sentence that may be imposed upon Safford is five years imprisonment and a fine of $5,000. It is thought by many that, in consideration of Safford's age, 60 years, and the jury's recommendation, a light sentence will be imposed.

James W. Osborne said he could not discuss the verdict because he was a Government witness in the case.

"The verdict speaks for itself," said United States District Attorney H. Snowden Marshall. "The Government considers Safford simply a tool of the Slades."

EXTORTIONIST CONFESSES.

Three Persons Arrested for Threatening Columbia Professor.

Locked up in the detention pen of the Harlem Court are three Persians who tried to get back to Persia on money extorted by threats from the Rev. Dr. Abraham Yohannan, Professor of Oriental Languages at Columbia Uni-West, Thirty-seventh Street, whose arrest was reported in THE TIMES esterday morning, Joseph Minor and Joseph Musha, both of whom live in the furnished room house at 317 West Thirty-eighth Street, were arrested early yesterday morning, and Magistrate McQuade held each of them in $5,000 bail for further examination.

The case started last Saturday, when Dr. Yohannan received a letter in Persian written from 317 West Thirty-eighth Street, which read: "We are a number of young men desirous of returning to our country to help our people. If you can give us $200 at once, all right; if not, that is your fault, not ours. We care no more for our lives. When girls, women, mothers, and children are in the hands of the infidels, we might as well die, too."

Dr. Yohannan took the letter to the Fourth Branch Detective Bureau. Finally it was arranged at a man should call for the money Tuesday night at Dr. Yohannan's residence at 557 West 124th Street. The man who came was Joel Jacobs, well known to Dr. Yohannan. He said he had been sent for the money, and took $1000 in marked bills that Dr. Yohannan gave him. Then Detectives Hill, McManus, and Brancato, who were hiding behind a curtain, arrested him. He was questioned closely, and finally admitted that Musha and Minor were his confederates. The detectives thereupon went to the house at 317 West Thirty-eighth Street and found the two asleep, but with their suitcases packed and ready to get away.

The Professor did not know Musha and Minor, but had been well acquainted with Jacobs, who has lived in this country for several years and speaks English well. He is said by the police to be the ringleader. Dr. Yohannan had at his disposal a fund for the aid of Persians in New York, and had several times given small amounts to Jacobs.

SILENCE WINS A GIRL $10,000.

Angler's Legacy to Companion Who Kept Quiet Is Upheld.

A jury before Surrogate Ketcham in Brooklyn yesterday decided that the will of Jacob Hyman, who gave his estate to Miss Herta Gretsch and her two sisters, Helena and Elsa, was valid. Hyman lived with the Gretsch family at 42 Sydney Place Brooklyn. He died on Jan. 13.

Miss Herta Gretsch, while a young girl, often accompanied Hyman on fishing trips. Her sisters also went along, but Herta always obeyed Hyman's instructions to keep perfectly quiet while the fish were biting, and this won Hyman's admiration for her to the extent of his leaving her half of his estate of $20,000. The other sisters each receive one-fourth. After the will was filed for probate relatives of Hyman contested it. They alleged that the testator was mentally unsound.

INSISTS MRS. CARMAN CONFESSED MURDER

NEW WITNESSES FOR STATE

Mrs. Black and Daughter Say They Saw a Man at Window Just After the Shooting.

Special to The New York Times.

MINEOLA, L. I., May 5.—Celia Coleman, the negro maid who worked in the Carman home at the time Mrs. Lulu D. Bailey was shot to death last Summer, today repeated her revised story of the circumstances surrounding the shooting, which she told at the first Carman trial and in which she accused Mrs. Edwin D. Carman of murdering Mrs. Bailey. She caused no little surprise in the Supreme Court by withstanding nearly two and a half hours of the most severe rapid-fire cross-examination to which George Morton Levy, attorney for Mrs. Carman, was able to subject her.

The maid admitted, as at the last trial, that she had lied about what she had seen in the Carman house on the night of the shooting, and about the events that followed, when questioned about them after the crime had been committed and when she testified at the Coroner's inquest. Mrs. Carman and Dr. Carman had told her not to tell what she had seen, she said in explanation.

Justice Blackmar at 4 o'clock granted a ten-minute recess in anticipation of again holding court later than usual in his effort to have the case concluded by the end of the week. When court reopened District Attorney Smith called the girl to the witness stand. She said that she had been to her home in Charleston, S. C., and had returned to New York State on March 7. It took her only about ten minutes to tell her story under direct examination, and the story was the same as the one she told at last October's trial, except that the part of it regarding the disposition of the revolver with which she said the crime was committed and which never has been found was ommitted today.

Witness Angers Lawyer.

Mr. Levy, on beginning his cross-examination, spoke in a low, confident tone, but before Justice Blackmar called a halt with the girl still under cross-examination at 6:35 o'clock the attorney had lost his temper half a dozen times. He made her go into minute detail regarding everything she had said, quizzed her regarding the wording of her answers to questions both at the inquest and at the first trial, as compared with her wording of answers today, and for a while subjected her to the ordeal of volleys of questions on one subject and then an entirely different one, with no breathing space between, but he failed to make her alter her story.

The attorney for the defense did prove that Celia Coleman possessed little exact information regarding her family connections, and that she could not add figures accurately. She did not really know how old she was and she was almost devoid of an accurate idea of time. First she said she was 23 years old; next she said she was born in 1889, she thought, and she admitted, when asked how she calculated her age as 23, that she might be a little older. Mr. Levy made her tell where she had lived. According to her rambling account, she had lived in Charleston for the first two years of her life, in Georgia until she was "about 15," in Charleston again for twelve more years, she "guessed," then in Georgia for more than a year before coming to New York last Summer.

In answering Mr. Levy's questions, she seemed unable to estimate the length of time that elapsed between one incident and another, and acknowldged that she could not explain how her two cousnis in Freeport came to be related to her—her mother knew about that, she said.

Mrs. Carman Calm.

Mrs. Carman maintained her composure during the telling of Celia Coleman's story, but at the start of it put on the curved lens glasses which she has worn at several critical points in the trial and behind them, her eyelids were blinking rapidly all the time the maid was on the stand. Elizabeth Carman, 12 years old, daughter of the defendant, was in court for the first time at the present trial, and during that part of Celia's testimony which conflicted materially with the story told by Elizabeth on the stand at the last trial the little girl's face was colored a flaming red.

The maid's story was that she was at the kitchen sink washing dishes on the night of the murder, June 30 last, when Elizabeth entered into the kitchen and began chating about her school work. Mrs. Carman, dressed in a purple kimona, with a shawl over her shoulders, and wearing a cap, entered through the kitchen from the dining room, told Elizabeth to "stay back," and wen out of the kitchen door to the yard. Then Celia heard a crash of the breaking glass and a shot, she said, and went to the pantury, which opened into the doctor's office. It sounded as if the sound had come from there.

Mrs. Carman returned through the door she had left, excitetd, and with one hand under her shawl, and exclaimed: "I shot him! See!" She then revealed a revolver which had been hidden beneath her shawl, Celia said, and told her not to tell anybody. Celia said Mrs. Carman went to her room the next morning, shortly after 5 o'clock, and said:

"Oh, Celia, what did I kill that woman for? I hope God will forgive me."

Mrs. Carman then told her again not to say anything, according to the maid, and said that she would take care of her (Celia's) little boy if anything happened. After breakfast, she said, Mrs. Carman followed her to the kitchen and again told her not to tell anybody. Mr. Levy called the same day and asked her a lot of questions. The next day, which was Thursday, she said, Mr. Levy called and asked questions again, and then asked her to sign a paper, which he read her and which she signed.

Maid's Affidavit Produced.

The paper in question was produced by Mr. Levy. It was the affidavit in which Celia told substantially the story she gave a short time later at the niquest, and in which she said that Mrs. Carman had not run through the kitchen on the night of the murder. Celia surprised the audience by declaring yesterday that she remembered seeing only one sheet of yellow paper when she signed the affidavit, and the document produced by Mr. Levy yesterday covered these pages. At its bottom was a note that it had been sworn to before him as a notary.

Mr. Levy devoted many of his questions to the signing of this paper and the commentary was made among the spectators that he exonerated himself. Celia said he did not ask her as many questions as were incorporated in the document, but also said she did not tell him the true story of the night at that time. Frequently Mr. Levy shouted at the witness. He asked many questions on one point, and shouted more loudly when she had neglected to answer for a while, only to reply that she thought she already had answered his question several times. Once there were hot words between the District Attorney and Mr. Levy, when Mr. Levy shouted at her:

"Do you think this is a joke!"

The witness said she knew it was a very serious affair and the District Attorney, rising, and facing Mr. Levy, exclaimed:

"You seem to think it's a joke yourself!"

"Keep quiet, both of you," interposed Justice Blackmar sharply.

In one instance Mr. Levy seemed exasperated because Celia answered one of his questions more fully than its wording called for.

"Before I talked to you on Thursday, you talked to the District Attorney on Wednesday night, didn't you?"

"I talked to you Wednesday morning before I saw Mr. Smith," replied the witness.

Mr. Levy had the answer stricken out of the record. He then asked if he did not tell her to tell the truth when he first questioned her about the affair, and she said she did not remember.

The maid will be recalled for further cross-examination the first thing tomorrow morning, it is expected.

Two New Witnesses.

Two new witnesses who were neighbors of the Carmans last Summer, and who said they were on the front porch of their home, which was the house next to the Carman house on to west at the time of the shooting, were called to the stand by the prosecution today. It was reported that efforts to find and subpoena them for the first trial were fruitless. They were Mrs. May L. Black, now of 95 Rodney Stret, Brooklyn, and her daughter, Ruth H. Black, 16 years old.

These witnesses testified that they heard the crash of glass and an explosion, which they thought to be that of a stove, and walked to their eastern porch. They saw nobody and walked out under a tree on their lawn, between their house and the Carman house, they said. From there they saw a man of medium build and wearing a slouch hat standing by the Carman house. He walked away and had his back toward them all the time, making it impossible for them to recognize him.

There were two important features to the testimony of Mrs. Black and her daughter. One was Mrs. Black's assertion that the murder was a daylight crime. This was one of the new points which the District Attorney in his opening address, said he would prove. It has been fought over bitterly by the opposing sides for several reasons. If it were light, the prosecution contends, George Golder and Archer Post, the two witnesses who were in Dr. Carman's reception room at the time of the shooting, could have seen any man who fled across the Carman lawn and jumped the picket fence separating it from the Black lawn, when they went to the west side of the Carman house immediately after the shooting. The defense has, or had at the last trial, a witness who said he saw a man do this immediately after the shot was fired.

Another reason for the fight over the daylight feature lies in the fact that the policeman in charge of the Freeport police station on the night of the shooting reported that Dr. Carman did not notify the department of the crime until 9 o'clock, an hour and a quarter after, as the prosecution contends, the shot was fired. Mrs. Black was positive that there was sufficient light to see across the lawns.

The other significant feature of the testimony of Mrs. Black and her daughter was their assertion that no man can from the Carman house to their lawn, as contended. Their view was unobstructed, the said, and they were positive that they would have seen him if he had run in that direction. Mrs. Black was recalled, after she had seen Mr. Golder on the stand, and said that his general appearance was that of the man she saw by the Carman house. Both Mr. Golder and Mr. Post today testified that they had walked around on that side of the house after the shooting, and had walked back on seeing nobody. Mr. Golder, however, insisted that he had on a straw hat.

Frank Farrell, the tramp witness for the prosecution, who appeared at the first trial, but of whom trace has since been lost, had testified that he walked around the Carman house after the shooting and peered in the Doctor's window. He had on a slouch hat. Today's testimony did not settle definitely the question of which, if any one, of these three men the Blacks saw. At mid-day there was a rumor that Farrell had been found in Manhattan, but this was unconfirmed.

Weather Man a Witness.

Dr. James H. Scarr, District Forecaster of the Weather Bureau in New York City, was called into the Carman case for the first time by District Attorney Smith to describe from his record book, which he brought along, the atmospheric conditions on the night of the murder. He said that the sun set at 7:32 P. M., and that the astronomical twilight lasted until 9:31. From 7:45 to 8:15 or 8:30, the time in which it is understood that the crime was committed, he said, it would have been light enough out of doors to read ordinary print, or to see a figure several blocks away.

Mr. Levy, in cross-examining the weather man, added the first touch of merriment which characterized the day's proceedings.

"Are you the man who prepares the weather forecasts for the papers?" he asked.

Some of them," replied Dr. Scarr.

"That's enough," said Mr. Levy, dismissing the witness.

The laughter which Mrs. Carman's lawyer caused was stopped short by Justice Blackmar, who then asked if June 30 was a clear or a rainy day. Dr. Scarr said it was not rainy.

George Golder, who went to the Carman home for some medicine before the shooting and helped place Mrs. Bailey's body on a couch in the doctor's office after the shot was fired, spent an uncomfortable half hour during the District Attorney's rebuttal examination, following Mr. Levy's cross-examination. He said he saw two women in white when he entered Dr. Carman's office after hearing the report of the revolver, and saw a negro girl. At that time he didn't know Mrs. Carman and her sister, Mrs. Ida Powell, he said.

Today Mr. Golder's testimony indicated that neither of the women in the doctor's office was Mrs. Carman, but that one was her mother, Mrs. Platt Conklin, and the other was Mrs. Powell. Mr. Smith asked if he remembered pointing out Mrs. Carman at the Coroner's inquest and identifying her as the woman he had seen, and put other questions based on the stenographic report of the inquest, the most of which Mr. Levy objected. Mr. Golder said that he picked out Mrs. Carman at the inquest "by dumb luck," and that he made a mistake in identifying her as the woman in the office.

The Justice overruled so many of Mr. Levy's objections that he finally assumed a sing-song voice in doing it, and did not even look up from the copious notes he is taking on the trial.

At the inquest Mr. Golder, pointing to Mrs. Carman, said, "That is the one I took for the doctor's wife—she let me in at the door." Today he said positively that he was wrong then, but acknowledged that his recollection was fresher at that time than now.

Mr. Smith also elicited the information that Mr. Levy paid Mr. Golder for the time he lost from his work during the last trial.

Nurse Tells of Slapping.

Elizabeth Variance, the nurse who testified at the first trial that Mrs. Carman had slapped her face and Dr. Carman's face in his office in April, 1914, after he had handed her $15, offered the same testimony today, being called to help establish the prosecution's theory of jealousy as a motive for the shooting.

Hazel Coombes, the Freeport stenographer, who was in the doctor's waiting room, at the time of the shooting, repeated her testimony regarding the other persons she had seen there, and Gaston Boissonnat, the former manager of the dictograph company from which Mrs. Carman purchased a dictograph to listen to the doctor's conversations with patients previous to the shooting, repeated his story of the circumstances surrounding the purchase and installation of the instrument. Mr. Levy did not attack the personal character of this witness as John J. Graham, Mrs. Carman's former trial attorney, did at the last trial.

Mr. Levy took exception to some of Justice Blackmar's rulings in the examination of this witness also, and the Justice began smiling when he replied, "All right," to the frequent exceptions.

Coroner Norton, who held the inquest; Frank C. Burrell, who installed the dictograph after Mrs. Carman had taken Dr. Carman away for a few minutes, Mr. Levy also shook hands with Mr. Bailey. Afterward asked if they had buried any animosity, Mr. Bailey said that it was the third time they had shaken hands, first on his arrival at Dr. Carman's house after the shooting, again at the first trial, and finally, to-day. Mr. Bailey said he felt no malice toward Dr. Carman.

At the conclusion of to-day's late afternoon session Mrs. Carman was asked how she felt.

"Satisfied," she replied in a colorless tone.

SUES FOR $1,050,000 ON WAR CONTRACT

RIFLES TO BRING $26 EACH

Cartridges Were Put Down at $36 a Thousand—None Was Delivered, Plaintiff Says.

Two actions were begun in the Supreme Court yesterday for $1,050,000 for profits that it was alleged would have accrued from the sale of rifles and ammunition if an agreement between Robert de Clairmont and Richard Tjader had been carried out. The former is the plaintiff, and he says in his complaint that about April 20 last he arranged with Mr. Tjader for the delivery of 700,000 Mauser rifles, 125,000 to be delivered between September and December of the current year and the remainder at the rate of 75,000 a month in 1916 until the contract was filled.

The rifles were to cost the plaintiff $25 each and he had a customer for them at $26, which would give him a net profit of $700,000. He had also contracted with Mr. Tjader, he says, for one billion rounds of cartridges for the rifles at $36 a thousand. The delivery of these wa sto begin immedately at the rate of 10,000,000 rounds a month and was to continue in varying quantities until December, 1916, when the order was to be completed. The net profit on the cartridges was to be $350,000.

Mr. Tjader's business is that of supplying military supplies. His office is at 17 Battery Place. No information concerning the suit was gathered there. Eliot Norton, counsel for the plaintiff, said yesterday that Mr. de Clairmont represented nobody but himself.

"My client," said Mr. Norton, "understood from Tjader that he had the rifles and ammunition to sell and Mr. de Clairmont went out to find a purchaser. Having found a market for the goods he called upon Mr. Tjader for their delivery and then learned that the latter could not make good. In these times of war contracts, when the profits are large, there are many brokers, and each is trying to make a lot of money. My client tried but the thing didn't go through. That's all there is to the suit."

MRS. SULLY'S SHOP FAILS.

Because the cook had left and taken the prize recipe, the Lady Baltimore Cake Shop, Inc., at 300 Madison Avenue, of which Mrs. Emma F. Sully of Watch Hill, R. I., is President, went into bankruptcy yesterday. No one in the place could remember what to put into Lady Baltimore cake. Mrs. Sully is the wife of Daniel J. Sully, one time "Cotton King," who failed in 1904 with liabilities of $6,000,000.

Maurice P. Davidson, the assignee, explained last night that when some of the help had been discharged several months ago they had spoiled the cake and the shop's reputation by "sabotage." Then the head cook left, taking with him the baking recipes, and the company could no longer fill its orders. The shop had a large patronage, it is asserted, and Mr. Davidson is anxious to find someone who knows how to bake Lady Baltimore cake. There will probably be a reorganization.

The Lady Baltimore Cake Shop was incorporated June 10, 1914, with a capital stock of $50,000. Besides Mrs. Sully, the officers were John L. Lordau, Secretary, and G. C. Ruggles, Treasurer. The liabilities are $10,000, with assets of about $3,000.

The failure of Mrs. Sully's cake shop recalls the venture of Mr. Sully in 1912 into the business of boarding house keeper at his home at Watch Hill, R. I.

CONSUL A SUICIDE AT SEA.

Naples Report That Our Lyons Representative Leaped Overboard.

NAPLES, May 4, (via Paris, May 5.)—The United States Consul at Lyons, one of the passengers aboard the steamship Sant' Anna, which has arrived here from New York, is reported to have committed suicide during the voyage by leaping overboard. He was on his way to his post in France.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—The United States Consul at Lyons, France, was Frederick Van Dyne, of Chevy Chase, Md., a leading authority on international law, whose works on citizenship and naturalization are regarded as standards. Consul Van Dyne sailed from New York on the Sant' Anna accompanied by Mrs. Van Dyne. He had been in this country on leave of absence since November and for most of the time was in a sanitarium at Chevy Chase. He had suffered a nervous breakdown and had not fully recovered when he started to return to his post.

Mr. Van Dyne was born at Palymra, N. Y., in 1861. He came to Washington when a young man and was employed as a clerk in the War Department for several years. In 1891 he was appointed to a place in the State Department and won his way through efficiency to the office of Assistant Solicitor. He had served as Consul at Kingston, Jamaica, and after another period of employment in the Solicitor's Office, was appointed Consul at Lyons.

Still Easy to Deceive Her.

In spite of the fairly thorough emancipation of woman, we have reason to fear that cigarette stains on the hands of bright young male offspring are still occasionally passed off upon her as walnut stains.—Ohio State Journal.

Help Relieve the Sufferings of the Wounded Abroad

Conditions there are appalling. Thousands and thousands of wounded soldiers are dying in the trenches, by the wayside, and even in the hospitals, who need dressings for their wounds. The situation has been so acute that table linen, sheets, pillow cases, petticoats, shirts, linen and cotton of every description have been requisitioned for bandaging soldiers' wounds. Even this supply is now completely exhausted. Wounds are often months in healing, and constantly require new and clean bandages.

At the trifling cost of 50c you can help an unfortunate brother across the seas by sending a

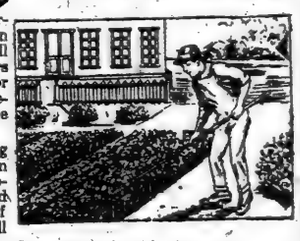
Ferry's Seeds



The reliable thoroughbred Garden Seeds; that most all professional gardeners have been using for fifty-eight years because they bring the best results.

No little farm or big lot is required when you buy Ferry's productive Thoroughbred Seeds; a patch of ground 25x60 feet will raise enough vegetables to supply a small family, and reduce the high cost of living.

Isn't that worth the slight effort of planting, to be able to go out to your garden and gather all the vegetables you want, all crisp, clean and fresh, for the table, and plenty left over to put away?

Just think, too, of the pleasure you will have watching them grow and gathering them in.

You'll never know just what a real pleasure it is until you "putter around the garden" digging, hoeing, planting and watering. It gives you the right kind of exercise, too, fills your lungs with fresh air and helps keep you in good health.

But good seeds are essential to a successful garden. We recommend Ferry's Thoroughbred Seeds—No Weeds—and every seed grows; per packet..... 5c up

Here is a partial list of popular vegetables that may be easily grown from Ferry's Thoroughbred Seeds:

Policeman Chases Burglars Who Had Plundered Big Treasure House.

BOAT AWAITED THE BOOTY

Three burglars who carried testing acids cut their way into a five-story treasure storehouse, at 547-49 West Twenty-first Street at daybreak yesterday morning, and were lugging away an enormous bag containing silverware valued at $5,000 when Policeman Benedict Brick spotted them. They ran, and he fired several shots at them. They escaped in Tenth Avenue, but had to leave their loot on the street.

It is supposed that a motor boat was waiting for them in the North River, only a couple of hundred feet away, for no automobile or other conveyance was in sight, and the heavy bag of plunder weighed 100 pounds or more.

The treasure house is a five-story brick building, barred and shuttered, and the sign says simply, "Thomas G. Brown & Sons." There is no outside indication that the manufacturing silverware business which was started in 1802, and which supplies much of the fine work seen in retail showcases in this city, Boston and Philadelphia, is carried on there. There was no watchman in the place, but one was hired yesterday, and went on duty last night. Thomas B. Brown, head of the firm, was at breakfast at the Union League Club, where he lives, when his superintendent, William Kroonbitter, notified him of the robbery. Until Mr. Brown went to the West Twentieth Street Police Station and identified the stolen articles, the police did not know where the plunder came from.

Burglars Enter Through Window.

There is an alley to the west of the Brown treasure house, and the burglars went twenty-five feet up this alley and made their first attack on a circular window in the wall. They cut an iron bar on the outside and then found that the window was build solid in the wall and could not be moved to give access to the steel shutters fastened on the inside. Then they went to the next window, cut one of the outside protecting bars and slipped it upward, making an opening about ten inches wide.

Breaking the sash and glass, they jimmied the lock from the steel shutters and pried loose the inside hook below the lock. Through this narrow opening one of the cracksmen got inside and handed out the articles to a man in the alley, while the third of the thieves presumably kept watch at the street entrance to the alley.

Apparently they took a careful survey of the stock stored in glass cases, but the burglars overlooked a chest of silver articles valued at $300. They jimmied the locks on two of the large storage cases and took what could most easily be melted into silver bullion. They left a dozen punch bowls, loving cups, pitchers and similar silver pieces which they had tested with nitric acid. A bottle of acid and a half-burned candle showed how they had worked. Some large articles that could not be passed through the window opening were left behind, but marred and broken by the thieves in the effort to bend the metal small enough to get it between the bars. A gold and silver punch bowl, 18 by 22 inches, and a silver bowl nearly as large, were damaged in this way.

There were finger marks on many of the pieces, but when the detectives from the Second Branch Burau sought to reduce them to fringer prints they found the thieves had donned canvas gloves before beginning work.

There were three safes in the storeroom, each filled with smaller silver articles and unmanufactured metal, but the thieves made no attempt to enter them. The firm will not know if the property recovered included all the goods taken until an inventory of the stock is made.

Policeman Shoots at Thieves.

Policeman Brick was patrolling Marginal Street about 6 o'clock when he saw a man at the Twenty-first Street corner, who turned and ran at once. He was probably the "lookout" for the burglars, who at that time were prepared to make a dash across the open space to their waiting bot. Brick ran to Twenty-first Street and saw his man, with two others, struggling with the bag of loot and trying to drag it toward Tenth Avenue. He fired his revolver in the air and the three dropped the bag and ran, the policeman in hot chase and shooting after them. One of the burglars threw off his overcoat as he turned into Tenth Avenue. Then all three darted into tenement house doorways and the policeman lost them.

ASTOR PLEA FOR MURIELLA.

So-Would-Be Extortioner Goes to Elmira Instead of Prison.

Vincent Astor, by a letter to Judge Swan in General Sessions yesterday, obtained a light sentence for John J. Muriella, the 18-year-old Italian boy, who admitted writing threatening letters to Mr. Astor. Muriella was arrested on April 16 in the Grand Central Station where William Debbyn, Mr. Astor's secretary, met him in response to a letter to the effect that he would kill Mr. Astor unless he received $500.

"Mr. Debbyn told me of his talk with you regarding the Muriella case," Mr. Astor wrote. "So far as my feelings are concerned, I am inclined to clemency, in view of his youth and since this is his first offense. Personally I would rather see him sent to a reformatory, where he would be taught a trade, than to State's prison. At the same time I do not want to make any recommendations to you, as you know so much more of cases of this kind than I do. I am sure that, with your great experience, you will render him absolute justice."

A probation officer reported to Judge Swann that Muriella was a victim of the drug habit. He had never been arrested before.

"In view of Mr. Astor's letter and the probation officer's report," Judge Swann said, "I will send you to the Elmira Reformatory. I will write a letter to the Superintendent, asking that you be kept from the other inmates and receive treatment which I hope will cure you of the drug habit."

VILLA CLAIMS NEW GAINS.

Says Carranza Lost 200 Dead in Latest Encounter.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 5. — General Villa's successes in his campaign against Obregon, south of Leon, in Central Mexico, continues, according to information received at the Villa agency here today. In a message, dated yesterday, at Leon, received today by Enrique C. Llorente, this statement is made by General Villa:

"In a battle yesterday with Obregon forces, the enemy was defeated, leaving 200 dead and many wounded on the field. The fight took place south of Trinidad Station, which is on the main railway line between Leon and Silao."

The State Department and the Carranzo agency were still without information today regarding the great battle that has been in progress since last Friday, extending over a wide territory, between the Villa and Obregon forces.

Conflicting statements were issued by the Villa and Carranza agencies here tonight concerning the new revolution, alleged to have been started by General Rosalio Hernandez, the commandant at Piedras Negras.

"Reports emanating from San Antonio," said Señor Llorente, "to the effect that General Hernandez has started a new revolution, were branded as false by General Hernandez himself in a personal message this afternoon which he sent to me."

The Carranza agency said it had received this message from Eagle Pass, Texas:

"Rosalio Hernandez has been named General-in-Chief of a new faction, and is left in the Rio Grande region to protect the Madero mines and to cover the retreat of Raoul Madero. Colonel Peraldi surprised the Hernandistas at Muzquiz and captured forty horses and supplies."

This message, however, was sent from Eagle Pass last night, while Señor Llorente's message from General Hernandez bore today's date.

DOUGLAS, Ariz., May 5.—While a Carranza garrison of 2,500 men was parading at Agua Priesta today celebrating the Mexican Fifth of May holiday, a detachment of Villa troops, who said they were part of an advance guard, came in under a flag of truce and surrendered.

HIT THE TRAIL FOR KINSMEN

407 Respond to Sunday's Appeal for Relatives Who Need Aid.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., May 5.—At the end of his sermon at the Tabernacle tonight, "Billy" Sunday asked those in the audience who had relatives needing help to stand up. Men, women, and children stood up all over the building and the tabernacle rang with shouts of "My papa," "My boy," "My husband." A little later 407 hit the trail.

Sunday preached at Montclair in the morning and "Ma" Sunday at Hackensack. The Montclair Theatre was crowded when Sunday touched on the subject of human vanity and one of his apophthegms was:

"The woman who is satisfied with compliments on her symmetry and her make-up has a brain made of oysters and sawdust."

Sunday was a great success at the Montclair Academy, where he said, after receiving a demonstration:

"If I had the church members lined up like you boys I would be all right."

His history on the baseball diamond was listened to with great interest here as it was expounded by Rodeheaver, the trombonist. Rodeheaver told how Sunday had made a circuit of the four bases in fourteen seconds, which was a world's record until Hans Lobert in 1912, made the four bases in thirteen and four-fifths seconds from a standing start.

Meantime "Ma" Sunday was leading a womaon's prayer meeting in the Presbyterian Church at Hackensack, which was crowded.

Back in Paterson again, Sunday was asked what he thought of Daniel F. Bradley, who was quoted as saying that the evangelist was only after money and had no more theology than a ditch-digger. Sunday said:

"If Bradley did support me and if Anheuser-Busch did support me, I would know that there was something the matter with my theology."

At the Paterson meeting Sunday said that, if he preached so as to please the Christian Scientists and Unitarians and saloon-keepers, when he got to heaven, God would say to him:

"Bill, step over to the left. Your elevator is going down in a few minutes."

Clergymen of Newark will meet at the Y. M. C. A. there tomorrow to decide whether they will join with laymen in asking Sunday to hold a revival in Newark. Several Newark clergymen are said to be opposed to inviting him.

JITNEY BUSES POPULAR.

Jitney buses have become very popular in Vancouver, B. C., since their introduction the first of the present year, and have greatly decreased the earnings of the electric cars, according to United States Consul General R. E. Mansfield.

At first, Mr. Mansfield says, a few taxicab drivers and owners of automobiles appeared in the streets with placards on their cars announcing 5-cent fares to various parts of the city along routes traversed by the electric tram lines. The almost instant success attained by the pioneers in the project, and the popularity of the jitney in competition with the street cars, encouraged others to engage in the business, and at the end of the first two months there were about 350 buses in operation on the city and suburban lines.

"The average daily earnings," Mr. Mansfield writes, "are reported to be $8 for each car. The report of the British Columbia Electric Railway Company, which has an exclusive franchise in Vancouver, for January of this year, shows that during the month there was a decrease of 1,138,333 in the number of passengers carried as compared with the corresponding period last year, when 3,364,062 passengers were carried.

"The question of responsibility, the regulation and control of the business, are questions that are occupying the attention of the municipal council. The innovation is meeting with strong opposition from the electric car company, but the sympathy and popular support of the majority of people who depend upon public service for transportation seem to be with the motor buses."

URGE FEDERAL LAWS TO GOVERN WORKERS

Hosiery and Underwear Manufacturers Prefer Them to Varied State Regulations.

WILSON LAWS ASSAILED

PHILADELPHIA, May 5.—Federal, rather than State, legislation to govern the working hours of women and children and other measures affecting manufacturers were advocated in a resolution adopted at today's session of the National Association of Hosiery and Underwear Manufacturers in annual convention here. The resolution declares that the Federal legislation is necessary in order that "manufacturers in different States may be placed on an equally competitive basis." P. O. Withers of Mount Vernon, Ill., who led the discussion on the subject, was elected President of the association.

I. F. Stone of New York, in discussing the dye situation, said: "Aniline dyes can be manufactured in the United States successfully from American materials, irrespective of European conditions, if American consumers of colors are willing to pay prices which the extra cost of manufacturing under the present conditions make necessary, and trust to the future to develop the industry to such an extent that hey can work under normal condiions in competition with the world.

"If the consumers are not willing to do their part, then there is no chance for the manufacture to develop at present to any extent."

The policy of the Wilson Administration toward business was attacked by Lincoln Cromwell of New York, who said in part:

"We are rearranging business in its relation to private and national life. Public opinion says that we have finished our pioneer days, that the adventurer of the nineteenth century is not needed in the twentieth, and that to free us from the peril of monopolies we must curb the individual and control private enterprise. We have turned back the march of capital toward absolute power. Mr. Roosevelt denounced trusts and "put teeth" into the Sherman act. Mr. Taft prosecuted them in the Standard Oil, Tobacco, and fifty other cases. Mr. Wilson's administration has pushed its court work into new fields, declaring that a combination like the Harvester Company is contrary to public interest, however upright its management toward buyers, sellers, or employes. But it has gone much further. It has covered from Congress powers over business which no Federal Government ever had before, and which as they are used may either direct the vast energies of our trade along safe channels or become a Frankenstein to destroy our liberties.

"The Democratic party has endowed Mr. Wilson with authority never thought of by the earlier Presidents. He appoints a Federal Reserve Board with autocratic powers over the national banks, the use of their reserves and the rates of discount. His Secretary of the Treasury and Comptroller of the Currency laid out the Federal Reserve districts and named the reserve cities to please themselves. The President appoints the Interstate Commerce Commission, no wall-powerful under the Hepburn and Clayton acts. There is practically no appeal from its decisions. It controls railroad property worth $20,000,000,000, employing 1,600,000 people whose yearly wages are a third greater than the national debt. The Interstate Commerce Commission fixes the charges of the express companies, pipe lines and telegraph companies. Its rulings spell success or disaster to the whole country, and the trusts never in their boldest days dreamed of such power for their most experienced captains as we have given to the seven men named by the President of the United States for the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"Now we have a third commission, one appointed by the President to see that we do not cheat each other in ways that few of us ever heard about. It is to set up standards of fair dealings and may hale us before the courts for failing to live up to its conception of what is right. But it has much opportunity to b econstructive rather than critical, and it is fair to say that the Federal Trade Commission has made a promising beginning and may become of great value in solving our commercial problems."

Mr. Cromwell cited the treatment of the express companies, the Alaska Northern Railway case, and Government pay for postal services as three examples of mistaken Federal policy. He continued:

"This administration scorned the council of business men in framing its tariff law, warning them away from Washington as if, one and all, they were robber barons. It framed the income tax law in defiance of security experts, and nobody knows yet just what it taxes. It pronounced the Federal Reserce act 'a perfect measure' while it was in a form soggy with Bryanism, its notes redeemable in whatever happened to be currency, instead of gold, and it resisted the amendments which corrected this fault. It defied the warning of commercial bodies everywhere in its struggle to jam through the Ship Purchase bill, and it passed the Seaman's bill, which undoes our conventions with twenty foreign countries and creates new obstacles for ship owners. Add to this, while our revenues were rapidly shrinking, it appropriated the record sum of $2,231,000,000 in two years, and asked Congress for $34,000,000 more than it got.

"These are some of the performances of officials who would redeem America from business men. The robbery of a protective tariff was to be exchanged for a condition where everything sold cheaper, but wages were higher. Our factories were to run overtime on peaceful exports. Our farmers and merchants were to get money for the asking which was formerly kept back for friends of the Money Trust. An income tax was to trim the rich and lesen the burden of the poor. We were going to hearten 15,000,000 peons in Mexico by getting them ballots and making them owners of happy farms, and prove themselves such a model of peace on earth and mercy mild that war the world around would cease to be. I would waste your time by detailing the failure of every item in this program. No retail prices were reduced by the Underwoow tariff. It decreased our exports and increased the imports from the day it passed until the war broke out in Europe. Our factories have been on part time, and our workmen on bread lines. No man borrows easier or in any other place than before the Federal Reserve Banks were shifted on to the poor through higher rents and mortgage rates. There never was such a fiasco in government benevolence.

"How long nt will last, and how it will end, depends most on us business men, for the reconstruction concerns us most. We can survive it best by showing patience and good temper. The country wants a rest from legislation, and I doubt if any of the new laws except the tariff would be repealed by a Republican Congress. The income tax law may be changed, and its collection simplified, but such a tax is likely to remain on the books."

GERMANY FEARS NO FAMINE.

Food Regulations Will Conserve Supply Until Harvest Time.

The problem of food supply grows daily in importance in Germany and everything possible is being done by the Government to regulate the use, and to further the conservation of existing supplies, according to United States Vice Consul General Louis G. Dreyfus, Jr., writing from Berlin.

In street cars, on billboards, and in the newspapers official notices have appeared, exhorting all to be sparing, and especially not to waste food, in order that existing supplies may last until the coming harvest. It is urged that bread be eaten only in small quantities, that potatoes be prepared in the skin, and all left over from the table be carefully retained and used.

The Bundesrat," continues Mr. Dreyfus, "has made these regulations: In milling flour, 82 per cent. of the contents must be extracted when rye is used, and 80 per cent. when wheat is ground. In normal times, only 65 per cent. and 70 per cent., respectively, were extracted, the remainder being converted into bran. In the future, wheat flour prepared and sold in mills must contain 30 per cent. of rye flour. No grain capable of being milled is allowed to be used for fodder.

"Wheat bread must contain 30 per cent. of rye flour, and up to 20 per cent. of potato flour may be substituted also for the wheat flour used. Rye bread must contain 10 parts of potato flour or potato flakes, or 30 parts of crushed or ground potatoes, to every 90 parts of rye flour. In the event that more than 10 per cent. of potato products are added, the bread must be marked with a 'K,' when this addition is less than 20 per cent., and with 'KK' when over 20 per cent. of such product is used. Instead of potato flour, barley, oat, or rice flour may be substituted."

Mr. Dreyfus thinks that the supply of wheat in Germany would be exhausted two or three months before the next harvest unless such regulations as outlined above had been adopted, including the substitution of rye flour and potato flour. Of the latter kinds, Mr. Dreyfus expresses the opinion that there are sufficient quantities on hand to last until the new crops come in.

"Many have erroneously thought that the 'war' bread, as it is called because of its large content of the less expensive potato flour, would be cheaper," Mr. Dreyfus says. "This is not the case, as the baking of bread made with potato flour takes longer and consequently equalizes the expense of the baker. Tests by the Public Health Service in Germany indicate that in taste, appearance, and consistency the bread containing potato flour is the equal of the pure-wheat bread and that only in its nourishing properties is this 'K' bread slightly inferior."

FAMINE IN DYESTUFFS.

All Countries Suffering from Their Dependence on Germany.

How materially the United States has been hampered by the inability since the war began to obtain from Germany and elsewhere in Europe the quantity of dyestuffs necessary for the various American textile, paint, varnish, and ink industries is set forth in a report recently made by the Secretary of Commerce.

The Secretary states that the American consumption of artificial dyestuffs attained last year a value of $15,000,000, of which $3,000,000 was supplied from domestic production, but the great bulk came from Europe, and from Germany alone $7,850,000.

"Since Aug. 1, 1914, in consequence of the outbreak of hostilities in Europe," writes the Secretary, "this foreign supply has been interrupted and constantly threatened with nearly complete cessation. Some important dyes are totally unobtainable. Prices have mounted from 25 to 50 per cent. on such dyestuffs as can be delivered. The importation of dyewoods has quickly increased. It is now four times as great as in normal times. Prices of these dyewoods have mounted. Fustic, for example, has doubled in price.

"A careful analysis of the situation shows that not only is the American supply and the limited American production of coal-tar dyestuffs completely dominated by the German industry, but that this is the case throughout the world. Even countries such as Great Britain and France, with ample supplies of crude material and highly developed industrial power, are in the same condition as the United States.

"In 1913 the total consumption of artificial dyestuffs in the world had attained a value of over $92,000,000. Germany furnished 74 per cent. of the entire amount and over one-half of the materials needed to make the remainder. The only country, in addition to Germany, manufacturing dyestuffs in any noteworthy manner for the world's markets is Switzerland. That country relies, however, for its crude and half-manufactured materials chiefly upon German sources."

NEW FISH IN THE AQUARIUM.

Three hundred fish of fifty varieties were brought to the Aquarium yesterday from Key West in tanks on the Mallory steamship Comal.

The Curator at the Aquarium said these were some new and interesting specimens, including two jolt-headed porgies, so named because they jolt pieces of coral off with their heads and then eat it; one bat fish, with a head resembling a bat, which walks along the bottom of the sea with the aid of its dorsal fins; five blue angels, four black angels, two spotted morays, five shark suckers, twelve spiney lobsters, fourteen spotted snappers, seventeen white grunts, three black groupers, eight red groupers, four dog snappers, seven yellow tails, one cow turtle, and one nautilus, the delicately varicolored jellyfish which sets its sail and is wafted over the tropical seas by the trade winds.

Directly the nautilus sights danger ahead, in the shape of a ship or men in a boat ready to grab it in a bucket, the fish lowers its sail, douses the colors that shine in the sun, and becomes invisible below the surface until the danger is past. Sailors in the olden days called it the man-of-war fish.

ONLY TWO TYPHUS CASES.

Dr. O'Connell Denies That Twenty Patients Have Arrived This Year.

Dr. Joseph J. O'Connell, Health Officer of the Port, said yesterday that there was no foundation for the report that there had been twenty cases of typhus and two deaths at Swinburne Island this year.

He added that there had been twenty cases and two deaths in 1914, following the Balkan war, but only two cases, and no deaths, since Jan. 1, 1915. The first was the third engineer of the Greek steamship Christoforos, who was taken to Swinburne Island last Saturday, and is doing well, and the other is Christos Kelepouris, the young Serbian who arrived yesterday on the Carpathia.

The latter is the first case to arrive in this country direct from the war zone.

Indicted on Fraud Charge.

George E. Mount, of Plainfield, N. J., who said he was an electrical engineer, was indicted yesterday in a charge of grand larceny, it being alleged he obtained through fraud $700 worth of leather belting from the Page Belting Company of 94 Warren Street. Attorneys for the company alleged Mount got a $42 commission for a "sale" to a fake firm.

TO DINE DR. JACOBI.

Hospital Physicians Will Honor Him on His 85th Birthday.

Dr. Abraham Jacobi will be the guest of honor tonight at a dinner in the Hotel Astor given by the physicians and officers of the Bronx Hospital on the occasion of Dr. Jacobi's 85th birthday. Eighty-five may seem an advanced age to many, but Dr. Jacobi feels that he is "only 85."

He has just returned from the dedication of the medical buildings of Washington University in St. Louis, Mo., and yesterday he asked to be excused when the subject of his birthday celebration was mentioned.

"I'm just like any other practicing physician of many years' standing," he said. "Surely you don't want me to talk about myself."

TO RULE ON PARCELS CARRIED IN CARS

Commissioner Hayward Hears Complaints of Workmen and Tradesmen.

CALL ROADS' RULES STRICT

Witnesses Appeal Against Ban on Tools for Day's Work and Small Packages for Delivery.

Commissioner Hayward sat yesterday to balance the rights of the ordinary subway or elevated passenger, and the needs of the workingman and small tradesman, who finds it necessary to carry bags of tools or bundles of merchandise in the cars, as he cannot afford either the time or the money involved in expressage. The Interborough officials said they would do anything that the Public Service Commission considered reasonable.

Recently, according to several witnesses, the subway and elevated guards have grown more critical as to the size of packages, and a notice has been put up in the stations calling attention to the necessity of limiting the amount passengers may take with hem. A. G. Peacock, counsel for he Interborough, denied that there had been any change in its rules, or that the Central Federated Union had any justification for its recent resolution denouncing the company as trying to injure workingmen by depriving them of the right to carry tools on its trains.

Samuel Katz, a paper hanger of 778 Trinity Avenue, the Bronx, testified that he had been excluded from the Subway because he had a board about five feet long. It was perfectly clean and dry, he explained, but Commissioner Hayward smiled.

Tabooed Sample Cases.

C. C. Hunt, of the Garment Salesmen's Association, said he had been turned back from the Subway with a sample case 30 by 18 inches, and he knew of others who had been refused leave to take with them a shirt-waist case about 18 inches every way.

Thomas B. Adams, a lawyer, of 165 Broadway, said that some time ago he had been greatly annoyed by a newsman at the Grand Central Station, who, he said, had pursued him with shouts as he ran down the platform to catch a train. Then he had seen the news men sorting their papers on t he trains and he said:

"When they throw them out, it's your time to jump. They don't care where they go."

Mr. Adams would not say that he had ever seen passengers standing up on account of the sorting of the newspapers, but they had had to move up close, he said. Then he had an argument with Victor Ridder of the Publishers' Association, who asked that the correspondence between himself and the witness be made part of the record. It appeared that the regulations of the B. R. T. permit the carriage of a newspaper bundle of not more than 24 inches in its greatest dimension, while the Interborough limits it to 18 by 12 by 15 inches.

Two representatives of the florists trade told Commissioner Hayward that if boys carrying floral pieces were kept from the Subway it would be the ruin of small florists in Harlem, and the plea of the paperhangers concerning their paste-board was urged by Frank Dullinger, secretary of the paperhangers' union.

Cake Specialist Was Sly.

Frank L. Lowter, who described himself as a cake specialist of 195 St. Nicholas Avenue, was frank in his admissions of how he dodges the ticket choppers.

"I've been pretty sly about it, your Honor," he said. "I wait till I see the chopper is busy and then slide by. But that's not business. We don't want to go, in fear and trembling; we want to know what we can do. I can't afford a special delivery of my own now, though I may yet have my own automobile."

Mr. Peacock took William Kelly of the Central Federated Union shaply to task for the resolution it had passed concerning the Interborough, but as a result of the clash Mr. Kelly promised to assist the commission in deciding the sort of tools a workman might carry. He objected to leaving the interpretation of the word "bulky" to the discretion of individual guards and ticket-choppers, and asked the commission to lay down some more explicit rules.

Harold A. Coe, a photographer often employed by the District Attorney's office, said that even though he explained that he was on official business, requiring haste, he had recently been refused admission with his camera at Worth Street and had been forced to walk to Brooklyn Bridge. He had appealed to the Interborough, but they had told him they could not issue a permit legally, although he often did work for them too.

Hand Baggage in Brooklyn.

Inspectors of the commission gave testimony as to what they had seen carried on the Brooklyn cars, and Commissioner Hayward looked astonished as he heard that baby carriages, a roll of carpet five feet long, a reel of zinc four feet long, water-coolers, soda fountains, a baby's high chair, and a big bundle of brooms had not seemed to strike the B. R. T. trainmen as out of the ordinary. There was even one case of a child's automobile that a passenger had wanted to take in the Subway.

Mr. Peacock, for the Interborough, explained that the company did not wish to be responsible for fixing the rule concerning bundles. Passengers were continually writing for permits to carry all sorts of things up to moving picture outfits, he said. As for tools the company did not want to be hard, but it could not permit saws, chisels, and so on which protruded from bags and endangered the other passengers to be carried.

The hearing was adjourned without a definite date for its resumption being fixed.

UPHOLDS FAMILY DOCTOR.

Dr. Jacobi Advises Mothers Not to Run to Specialists.

The family physician is more to be trusted than the specialist, and for that reason poor mothers are advised by Dr. Abraham Jacobi not to imitate the "bad habits" of the rich, who prefer to have their children treated by the latter. Dr. Jacobi gave his views on this subject recently at a meeting of mothers and patrons at the Hospital for Deformities and Joint Diseases, 1,910 Madison Avenue.

"There are few families that could not receive sound advice from a doctor, a conscientious one, if they would only stick to him and establish friendly relations with him," said Dr. Jacobi. "If you imitate the bad habits of the rich who have lost such relations with a conscientious family doctor, preferring a good or inferior specialist for every limb or organ from their corns to the crown of their heads, you lose your best chance for honest dealing.

"I feel sure that sixty and fifty years ago, when I was largely employed by tenement house people who clung to me, I was of more service to my patients than when I became a sort of specialistic fancy.

"Many of our little patients are rickety or tuberculous. A large percentage of them suffer from those serious, even fatal, ailments. Many cannot be cured when once diseased; but the vast majority would never have been sick if their mothers had enjoyed better opportunities to learn a few facts.

"The rickety children suffer less from bad feeding than bad air and darkness and uncleanliness. Dark rooms, rooms without windows, rooms without open windows, should long ago have been considered a crime in this country. Even well-fed babies of well-to-do people become rickety if kept locked up at home. When half a century ago I preached that night air was better than no air, I was condemned as a heretic.

"If mothers want healthier children, they should follow some advice like this. I know all about it, having been a sort of mother ten thousand times. Nurse your own child to protect him against rickets or probably tuberculosis. Of one hundred mothers, ninety-five are able to do that. If, however, you have to feed cow's milk, never use it undiluted, and the best dilution is not water, but barley water or oatmeal water, sweetened, and with a trace of table salt. Never use raw milk. It must be heated. Raw milk, even the very best, even certified milk, of which only 14,000 quarts reach this city daily, should be treated as suspicious, and should be heated. If you will remember these few lessons, and act accordingly, you will protect a large percentage of the city's babies from such diseases as compel you to bring them here."

Frequently when Dr. Jacobi walks into a meeting where other doctors of his acquaintance are present they rise and salute him.

As to Kissing.

The Kings and high officials of Europe, when they meet, always embrace and kiss each other, no matter what their relations have been in the past or may be in the immediate future. This is a kiss of respect. It may be given on the lips, the cheek, the brow, or the beard and is nicely adjusted, according to the age and rank of the giver. From this close personal contact it passes through many forms: kissing the hand, parts of the clothing and even the ground trodden upon, according to the idea of respect or fear inspiring the one who performs the act.

The nations of the west have not adopted this ancient custom as a form of salutation, but have reserved it for the more tender relationships of life.—The Christian Herald.

A Sign of the Times.

One of the best signs is the decided change in public sentiment regarding the railways and the great industrial corporations. Instead of driving business out of the States, they are now being welcomed. The Missouri Supreme Court has just readmitted the International Harvester Company of America to do business in that State; the Ohio Supreme Court has dismissed the suit to oust the Standard Oil Company from Ohio, and the Federal District Court has dismissed the complaint of the Government against the great steamship lines on the charge that they were violating the Sherman Law.—Jasper in Leslie's.

BACK TO ROADTOWN, J. E. LATHROP'S PLEA

SINKING IN SWAMP OF DEBT

Calls New York Overgrown and Growing Too Fast for Conveniences to Keep Up.

At a recent meeting of the Society of the American Renaissance in this city, John E. Lathrop, the Director of the only City Planning Exhibit in America, brought forth some astonishing figures of municipal extravagance in New York in the course of an address, which had for its object the advocacy of "Roadtown," the novel plan for city building which would make each city consist of but one street. The roadtown idea was originated by Edgar Chambless and has been widely discussed.

After defining the essential elements of urban or rural life in its most desirable form as "sufficient land on which to live; sufficient room in which to breathe; sufficient sunlight to keep life wholesome; sufficient water with which to keep clean; normal human comradeship; normal recreation to assist the re-creative forces, and a fair chance in the world for every man, woman or child," Mr. Lathrop went on to point out how far from these ideal conditions modern cities, notably New York, had fallen. He said in part:

"I am not the physician who, when he called, always sought to throw his patient into fits, because, as he averred, he was 'death on fits.' I am not erring by erroneously assuming that the creation of model city conditions would solve all the ills to which human flesh is heir. But I am confident that a very large part of our increasing social woes come from the breakdown of the thing we call a city, and its failure to meet the demands we have and should put on it.

"Our cities population increased 34.8 per cent. from 1900 to 1910, while the country as a whole increased only 21 per cent. City increase was 70 per cent. and country increase 30 per cent.; urban increase, then, was more than twice country increase.

"How does this work out practically? Is my assertion true that our problems are piling up faster than we solve them? Take city transportation. Ten years ago New York spent $90,000,000 for subways. The added facilities were absorbed in six months, and the cars were worse crowded than ever, and three years ago more subways were planned—$450,000,000 of them; or, in ten years, $450,000,000 of debts were provided for to solve New York's city transportation problem. Yet who does not know that the new subways will be absorbed as rapidly as each new unit is completed, leaving the city with an unsolved city transportation problem.

"The Croton water supply was provided at great expense. Immediately a new added supply was planned, and is just now coming into use, at a cost of nearly $200,000,000. Bridges have been built by New York which have cost nearly $100,000,000, and several more are planned, one alone—to New Jersey—to cost $42,000,000. Freight terminals are proposed for New York in Brooklyn to cost perhaps $100,000,000. The passenger terminals of the New York Central and Pennsylvania cost millions. The improvements to Riverside Drive and the covered freight tracks of the New York Central are to cost something like $50,000,000.

"The regular expense of New York City during the five years the subways and other betterments are to be built will be $200,000,000 a year, or $1,000,000,000. It is safe to assume that in this period still other added improvements will be projected which will aggregate $100,000,000.

"Controller Prendergast has stated that New York in this fiscal year has received more than $500,000,000 and disbursed more than $500,000,000. For the five-year period the total would be the unthinkable amount of $2,500,000,000, or at 5,000,000 population a per capita of $500!

"Now, as New York's population grows, the figures per capita are constantly increased. Unless something cures this ballooning tendency these charges per capita will reach $1,000, or twice a whole year's total income of the average representative adult worker in the United States.

"What is going on in this fashion? Is it pessimism to pause to consider? Is it not simple wisdom to do so? What business can endure when costs pile up faster than returns? What is the end of such a business?

"Bankruptcy! That's all! I know the thoughtless but enthusiastic city booster will decry this course of reasoning and brand the reasoner as a 'knocker.' But we are where we must stop to think, and think in terms of common sense, and common sense compels one to conclude that things cannot trend as they trend now without eventually making city life impossible."

BRITISH VOLUNTEER ARMY.

Observations on the Eve of the Continental War.

When Lord Haldane, speaking at Newcastle in 1906, remarked that the problem with which he, as War Secretary, was confronted was not so much one of the regular army as of a nation in arms, the people as a whole welded into one entirety, he told the writer of these notes that he hoped to see this ideal fulfilled in Great Britain. He believed the people would soon of their free will accept the obligation of universal military service without any necessity for resorting to compulsion. Since these words were spoken we have seen Australia and New Zealand willingly take upon themselves the obligation, but the mother country is not one step nearer the fulfillment of Lord Haldane's optimistic prophecy.

I believe the majority of the young men in Great Britain to be quite willing to do their share of military service if such service were made compatible with their civil obligations. That it has not been made sufficiently so is in a great measure the fault of the military authorities. It seems impossible for the military authorities to realize that in order to make military service palatable and to make a tolerable fighting man out of a citizen on the voluntary principle, it can only be done by the least possible infringement of his personal liberty, and by the least interference with the occupation upon which he and his family depend for their living. If their civil occupations permitted it the ranks of the special reserve and of the territorial force would, it is believed, be filled tomorrow. We require to take a leaf out of the Swiss militia system.

A very serious blot in our present military system is the prevailing epidemic of desertion, which, in spite of the amelioration of the soldier's condition, is unfortunately on the increase. In 1912 no fewer than 1,381 deserted; in 1913, the number was 1,552; and for the eight months ended 31st May, 1914, the total reached 2,067. During the past ten years, the number of regular soldiers who deserted reached the significant total of 30,491. There must be something radically wrong in the service when so many men after but a few months' experience of the "advantages of the army" are so anxious to be free of it. Whether it is due to the increasing disinclination to restraint, to the attraction of the Colonies, or to dissatisfaction with the prevailing conditions of service it is difficult to say offhand.

Desertion is more prevalent in time of peace in voluntary than in compulsory armies. One would naturally suppose that a voluntary soldier would have no desire to desert, while a compulsory soldier would have no desire to serve; but practical influences alter the case somewhat. For one thing the voluntary soldier in an army like ours often finds the conditions of service not quite up to his expectations. And it must be said that the attractive posters and alluring advertisements are not always models of accurate representation. In fact, they are frequently quite the opposite, although there is no necessity in these days to delude the recruit with exaggerated statements and empty promises. The system is mean without being economical, for desertion means loss of both money and men.

It has been said that so comparatively few have been the changes in cavalry tactics that the book written by Xenophon 2,200 years ago might be reproduced now and be by no means inapplicable. Probably no better history of cavalry has yet appeared than that published in 1877 by Col. G. T. Denison of the Canadian military forces. It is really the essay with which he won the first prize of 5,000 roubles offered by Alexander II. of Russia. A reprint of the book has just been published by Macmillan & Co., but unfortunately it does not go beyond the Franco-German War of 1870-1871, for the reason that the author sees no reason to modify the views he expressed forty years ago.

Col. Denison's appreciation of the power of the modern rifle appears to have rather blinded him to the fact that cold steel still has its uses. He attaches little or no importance to the sword or lance, and would substitute for them in close fighting the revolver, one of the most difficult weapons to use even on foot, and more difficult still to effect any result with when mounted. In spite of his examples of the value of the pistol in the American War, and of his free quotation of Erskine Childers—to whose views we attach no importance—we believe the sword and the lance to be both essential to the efficient armament of modern cavalry.

A recent Indian Army order compulsorily relegates to the unemployed list all Lieutenant Colonels of native infantry regiments at the age of fifty, and of cavalry regiments at the age of forty-eight, other than commandants. We do not think that any fault can be found with the authorities for deciding to alter the old system which has been in force for more than a quarter of a century. The additional Lieutenant Colonels at best were not necessary to the military efficiency of the unit. They were in a somewhat false position, an embarrassment to the regiment, and in a somewhat humiliating situation.

The new system, however, entails some hardship which it is hoped may be remedied to the satisfaction of the officers concerned. It would appear that an additional Lieutenant Colonel is equally in the way at forty-five as at fifty. Why not, therefore, allow all Lieutenant Colonels of twenty-six years' service, regardless of age, to reside out of India until their full pensions become due? These few years would help the individual to start a new career at home before too late, could injure nobody's prospects, and entail no additional cost on the Estimates.—London Globe.

TO MAKE GARDENS OF TENEMENT ROOFS

TOPS OF RICH HOMES IN USE

One Woman Has Outdoor School for Her Children Far Above Noise and Dirt of Street.

Why cannot New York use its roofs as the roofs of the houses of the Far East are used, when in this city of dense population there is more need of fresh air than in any or the cities where people live more in the open? That is one of the questions the members of the International Child Welfare League, Mrs. Walston Hill Brown, President, are asking. Individually some of them have put their own roofs to good service, but they would like to see the roofs of the houses of the poor, whose need is greatest, made useful to keep the little ones off the streets and to give the grown-up people a cool place to rest. The expense of railings and simple awnings for the tenements it is thought would be very little, but it has been difficult to formulate definite plans as yet.

It is the members of the league who have utilized their own roofs for their own children who are most anxious to have something of the same kind done for the poor. A birdseye view of the roofs of uptown city mansions would show more use of roofs than is generally known. The member of the league who has done most in this line has an open-air school for her children on the roof and, with a few children of friends, they spend a good part of their time for six months of the year there.

The school numbers from eight to a dozen children, varying from year to year. There are three children in the family having the little outdoor schoolhouse. This is on the very top of the house and is built a little up from the roof. One reaches the roof by a circular iron staircase to the top of the house, and the school is reached by half a dozen steps. It is on the south end of the roof, is covered over the top and has windows on the north side, but the south side is entirely open. The children are well bundled up and different instructors go to them there. There are regulation school desks and seats, and the school is conducted with care and thoroughness if less rigidity of discipline is necessary than where there are more pupils. The little people love the school and resent anything that takes them from it. They make more progress in the six months of their school year than many other children in the longer terms of regular schools the instructors say. At the same time they are kept in rugged health and a cold among them is almost unknown.

The outdoor life of the children in this family began with the eldest child, who, being delicate, was given a playground on the roof on an annex to the house. Here are still swings and sliding boards, where the children play when they like as well as in the school yard, which is the remainder of the roof, where their little school house is placed.

From this house one can look around on a little roof-top village. To a higher house one may look up and see an awning covering a large part of the roof. That is the home—not always occupied by him—of one of New York's best-known men. There is a little forest of trees on the roof of a multimillionaire's home. On another roof, upon which one can look down, there is a couch where a little invalid may be seen at different times during the day, and not far from the couch is a table with books. On still another roof a little girl may be seen at play sometimes, but there are no special provisions for a roof garden.

The idea of the mother who is especially interested in the roof garden for her own as well as for the poor little children of the city is that on the roof the air is clearer and purer, and also the children safe from harm. The last may not always follow, as she found even in her own home.

A child was playing on the roof with the nurse when a nurse from another house, also with a child, called down:

"Do you think you had better take your child in? This little boy is recovering from scarlet fever."

They did take the child in quickly and away from the house, which was closed until all danger from contagion in the neighborhood was passed.

That was one incident, but only good has resulted from the outdoor life which has been given the children. So this particular mother and other mothers in the league are anxious to have less fortunate women have something of the same chance for their babies, and they are looking for ideas to be developed.

SUBMARINES ARRIVE, FIRST OF BIG FLEET

EXPECT TWO MORE TODAY

World's Best Under-Water Fighters to be on View—New York and Texas Will Welcome Visitors.

The vanguard of the Atlantic Fleet steamed into the Hudson yesterday afternoon. The first arrivals, which will be followed between now and Saturday morning by the superdreadnoughts, dreadnoughts, and predreadnoughts of the fleet as well as the destroyer divisions and the naval auxiliaries, were three submarines of the D class, the monitor Tonopah and the destroyer Macdonough.

The Tonopah was formerly the monitor Connecticut and is now the "mother ship" of the Second Division of the Atlantic Submarine Flotilla. Lieutenant Thomas Withers is the division commander.

The Macdonough is one of two destroyers assigned to duty with the submarines as a tender. The ships in yesterday will anchor off 136th Street. Submarines E-1 and E-2 are also in this division, and will probably arrive today. The vessels in yesterday came from Norfolk.

The three submarines of the G class are now at the Navy Yard in Brooklyn and will steam to their review position in the Hudson between now and Saturday.

The other boats of the submarine flotilla coming to New York are the four vessels of the E class, which are now en route from the Winter submarine training base at Pensacola, Fla. With the K division is coming the auxiliary cruiser Prairie, the flagship of Commander Yates Stirling, the submarine Commander in Chief, and the destroyer Worden, which is the tender of the division.

The K boats are coming more than 1,200 miles under their own power, which is said to be a new record for submarine divisions. They are proceeding all the way on the surface and are commanded by Lieutenants J. O. Fisher, S. C. Grady, Radford Moses, and L. C. Dunn, with Submarine K-8, under Lieutenant Fisher, acting as division flagboat.

World's Best Submarines.

The Ks should be in the Hudson tomorrow morning. These vessels displace 450 tons each and are equipped with Diesel oil engines, capable of 14 knots on the surface.

The boats have a cruising radius of about 5,500 miles, or from New York to Queenstown and return, and it will be news to many that there are such submarines in the United States Navy. These are the latest and best of submarines, and according to their records this Winter are the equal of any submarines in the world.

The arrival in New York of the submarine flotilla will be the wind-up of a successful and strenuous Winter's work in Pensacola. The flotilla has been making submerged runs, firing torpedoes, and studying submarine warfare every minute. The K submarines are the only ones, however, that have been in Pensacola all the Winter, although the E boats had six weeks of work which added greatly to their proficiency.

The flotilla will be the biggest the navy of the United States has ever assembled, including the Second Division of D boats, Third Division of G boats, Fourth Division of K boats, flotilla flagship Prairie, Fulton flotilla repair ship, tenders Tonopah, Ozark, and Tallahassee, and the destroyers Macdonough and Worden.

Entertainment Program.

Finley J. Shepard, Chairman of the committee appointed by Cornelius Vanderbilt, Chairman of the Mayor's Committee, announced yesterday that the program of entertainment for the enlisted men will be complete by the time the fleet arrives Saturday morning. It includes theatre parties, baseball games, and perhaps a smoker or a picnic or two. The officers and men have been invited by the Metropolitan Museum of Art to visit the museum, to which admission will be free to them. The Museum of Natural History has extended similar courtesies. The Botanical Garden also announced yesterday that naval visitors will be welcome, and the Zoological Park will admit men in uniform free on all days.

Because the battleships Texas and New York, the two latest additions to the navy, are the largest vessels in the world except the British Queen Elizabeth, many inquiries have been received as to where those ships will be anchored and whether visitors will be received.

As with the other battleships, visitors will be welcomed from 1 o'clock until 4:30 every afternoon, beginning next Sunday. The visitors who have left the landing places by 4:30 will be admitted to the ships, but at 5:30 all visitors must be prepared to leave, and no one must be on the ships after 6 o'clock. The New York will be directly off Eighty-sixth Street and the Texas off Ninety-first Street. The nearest landing place for both will be at the foot of Seventy-ninth Street.

Preparations are making for a gala night on Riverside Drive, Saturday, May 15. The fleet will be especially illuminated that night, and dinner to the officers of the fleet will be given by the Mayor's Committee at the Biltmore Hotel. There will be fireworks on all the floats from Seventy-ninth Street up to 158th Street. At various places along the Drive there will be band concerts.

JERSEY TROOPS STAY HOME.

Because of Money Shortage Officers Only Will Go to Camp.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, May 5.—Because of the strict economy practiced by the Legislature in the matter of appropriations as the only way to avoid a bond issue or direct tax to meet the existing deficit, there will be no encampment at Seagirt this Summer of the five regiments of infantry in the National Guard.

Announcement of the suspension of the annual manoeuvres was made today by Adjutant General Sadler and Quartermaster General Murray, with the approval of Governor Fielder. This year's appropriation for the militia is $132,113 less than last year.

Commissioned and non-commissioned officers of all branches of the service will have their usual exercises, however. General Sadler announces instruction camps will be held at Seagirt in July, with officers of the field artillery going to Fort Sill in Oklahoma in June for firing practice and to Tobyhanna, Penn., for camp instruction. Cavalry officers will be instructed at Mount Gretna, Penn., and Port Myer, Va.; signal corps officers will go to Fort Leavenworth, Kan., while heads of the medical corps will be instructed at Tobyhanna.

FILM A FORCE FOR SOBRIETY.

Moving picture shows are aiding in solving the dring problem, according to Magistrate John A. Leach of Queens, in an address to the Men's Club in Astoria yesterday.

In the Second District, which includes Queens, Brooklyn, and Richmond Boroughs, in 1907, when the total population of those boroughs was 1,775,000, there were 16,000 arraignments for intoxication. Last year in the same district with a population of 2,267,625 there were only 8,382.

"Every Magistrate in the city is commenting upon this remarkable decrease in intoxication," said Magistrate Leach. "In courts where there were from fifteen to twenty cases of intoxication a day it is now rare to hear more than three or four.

"We Magistrates agree in attributing this condition to education and to the publicity given by newspapers showing the general distrust of drinkers by employers, but principally to the moving picture theatres. The workingman who formerly went to the saloon as the 'workingman's club' now goes to the picture show and takes his family. That is now the chief amusement of the workingman, and not only the Magistrates have noticed the effect upon the liquor traffic, but saloon keepers themselves admit it."

BIG MEAT STOCK IN JERSEY.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., May 5.—There were 16,223,115 pounds of fresh meat in cold storage warehouses in New Jersey on April 1 last, compared with 6,766,663 pounds on April 1, 1914, and 2,523,361 pounds on April 1, 1913. The figures were made public today by the State Board of Health, and the great increase is attributed to the war abroad.

The total amount of other foods in cold storage on April 1 last follows: Eggs, 1,738,590 dozens; broken eggs, 66,936 pounds; butter, 369,418 pounds; poultry, 6,264,841 pounds; salt meats, 614,636 pounds; fresh fish, 258,589 pounds; smoked fish, 198,400 pounds; dried fruits, 20,195 pounds; nuts, 100 pounds; green fruits, 61,044 packages; green vegetables, 23,243 packages; miscellaneous, 4,614 packages.

TELEFUNKEN CHARTS AID MARCONI CLAIM

DONE BY EXPERT ON VISIT

Diagrams purporting to show the entire mechanical arrangements of the Sayville, L. I., wireless station, were introduced yesterday at the opening of the case of the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company against the Atlantic Communication Company before Judge Van Vechten Veeder in the United States District Court in Brooklyn. The Marconi company is suing for an injunction to prevent the German firm from sending or receiving messages with Telefunken instruments, which, they contend, infringe upon the Lodge and Marconi patents. They also ask for damages.

Guglielmo Marconi, inventor of the wireless system, sat through the day's session, and probably will be called as a witness today.

Roy A. Weagand, an engineer for the Marconi company, supplied the first surprise, when, after testifying that he was a Canadian and a graduate of the University of Toronto, he told of his experiences at the Sayville wireless station. On October 27, 1912, he said, he visited the Long Island wireless plant, and from observation and investigation drew diagrams of the wireless outfit there. These drawings were submitted as an exhibit. The witness further testified that on June 29, 1914, he visited the West Street, Manhattan, station of the Telefunken Company, and made observations and later drawings.

On cross examination the witness admitted that he had spent only half an hour at the Sayville Station, but asserted he was able to draw the diagrams through his familiarity with wireless apparatus.

Julius Martin, assistant engineer of the Marconi Company, testified that he was familiar with all systems of wireless telegraphy. For twenty years he had served in the United States Navy, and between 1904 and 1912 he was engaged in wireless engineering in that service. He testified that he had assisted in the installation of stations at Radio, Key West, Norfolk, and various other points throughout the country. The greater part of his time was spent at the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

"Are you familiar with the Telefunken apparatus?" he was asked.

"I am."

"When did you see this system in operation?"

"On Aug. 18, 1914, on board the steamship Herman Fresch, coming from France. I studied the apparatus and found that a few changes in the receiving and transmitting apparatus had been made. The instuments differed in form from the Telefunken sets we had used in the navy, but the mechanism was the same."

On cross examination Mr. Martin told of the features of the different systems that had been tested in the Navy, naming the Telefunken, Marconi, De Forest, Tesla, and Shoemaker. Some of these names, he said, had since been changed. Pictures of the outfit on the Herman Fresch, showing the sockets for increasing the radius for messages from 200 meters to 4,000 meters were introduced as exhibits.

Frank Waterman, a nelectrical expert, who for eleven years was in charge of the work of the Westinghouse Company in this city, gave expert testimony on the Sir Henry Lodge patent, No. 606,104, and the Marconi patent, No. 763,772. His testimony was highly technical.

The Atlantic Communication Company is a New Jersey corporation, but is recognized as the American branch of the German Telefunken system. At the beginning of the war the Sayville agents were accused of violating the President's neutrality proclamation by sending messages to German warships. They were cleared of this charge, and allowed to continue business.

Both complainant and defendant presenting an imposing array of counsel. For the Marconi company the firm of Sheffield & Betts, and Livingston Gifford and H. G. Ogden appeared. The defendant corporation was represented by Kight Brothers, with Frederick P. Fish of Boston, Philip Farnsworth and Walter H. Pumphrey assisting.

CHILD NOW 21 MONTHS OLD

Mother Died Last Year in Washington—Sisters and Nephews Remembered in Will.

Little Lucille Spafford, a year and nine months old, daughter of Lieut. Commander Edward E. Spafford, U. S. N., is heir to the income for life from a trust fund of $839,265 created out of the estate of her grandmother, Mrs. Elizabeth Millan Stevens, widow of John Rhinelander Stevens, who died April 17, 1914. The fact came to public notice yesterday with the filing of the appraisal of Mrs. Stevens's estate in the office of the State Controller.

The report shows that the little girl's mother, Lucille M. Spafford, only daughter of Mrs. Stevens, died at her home in Washington on Feb. 20, 1914. Mrs. Stevens's home was at 14 East Sixty-third Street.

Under Mrs. Stevens's will, the fund is to be held in trust until the little girl is 21. In the meantime, she is to have as much of the income as shall be needed for her proper maintenance and education. All surplus income is to be paid to her when she arrives at full age, and she is to have the power of disposal of the entire fund at death. If she dies before attaining full age the fund is to be divided equally between St. Bartholomew's Church and the New York Orthopaedic Dispensary.

Edgar Arnold Hopkins and William Henry Hopkins, nephews, each receives $1,000. There are smaller bequests to employes and friends of Mrs. Stevens.

The net estate amounted to $925,169, of which $532,575 was in realty, $40,681 in bank deposits and $366,506 in stocks and bonds.

DOCTORS WIN OSIRIS PRIZES

Three Discoverers of Vaccines Will Divide $20,000.

PARIS, May 5.—The French Institute has announced that the Osiris prize, which this year amounts to 183,000 francs ($36,600) because no award was made in 1912, has been awarded chiefly for discoveries in medicine. Drs. Chantemesse and Vidal, discoverers of anti-typhoid vaccines, will divide 50,000 francs, ($10,000), while an equal amount will go to Dr. Vincent, whose researches resulted in the finding of ether vaccine.

Various ambulances receive 60,000 francs, ($12,000), and the remainder is placed in reserve.

In 1899 Daniel Osiris, the philanthropist who presented Malmaison to the French nation, gave into the keeping of the Institute of France a sum representing an annual income of about $3,500 for a triennial prize of $20,000, open to all countries, for the most remarkable work or discovery of general interest. M. Osiris died in 1907.

New Yorkers warm to EVERY WEEK

It melted from the news-stands like snow in May

Up to 5 P. M. Monday afternoon 204,492 copies of EVERY WEEK had been sold in Greater New York alone.

That is a good many for the first issue of a new publication. In fact, it breaks all records in the magazine field for the past 40 years.

Thousands of late buyers simply could not get a copy of EVERY WEEK for love or money.

While the coming edition will be much larger we recommend placing your order with your newsdealer today on your way home—tomorrow at the latest.

In addition to its new, crisp thought-provoking articles and real pictures the next issue of EVERY WEEK starts you guessing "Who was Marie Dupont?"—the great mystery serial of the year.

YANKS GLEAN THREE HITS OFF WYCKOFF

The dilapidated Athletics spruced up yesterday at the Polo Grounds and in a neat, honest-and-true effort beat the Yankees by a mere eyelash, 2 to 1. Yes, it's difficult to believe that the Yankees were defeated, but, as Bill Donovan says, the best of them get it sooner or later. The main idea in the Yanks' defeat was a slim, modest youngster by the name of J. Weldon Wyckoff, who has been out of college such a short time that he still remembers his Latin and Greek.

J. Weldon can do other things besides read Sanscrit. He can pitch. He can do more than that; he can pitch so well that it's next to impossible to hit him. The Yankees got three hits off Wyckoff. One of these slams was a three-bagger in the ninth by Doc Cook. Doc scored on a wild pitch. If J. Weldon had not taken it into his head to get wild at that moment, the Yankees would have been ignominiously kalsomined.

Ray Keating pitched a pretty nifty game, too. If his name had been Mike instead of Ray he could not have pitched any better. Rube Oldring, the lucky citizen, was the only one who stood between Keating and victory. The manner in which Rube intruded into the picture, however, left no doubt in the mind of Mr. Keating that Oldring is a "bad actor," and altogether too familiar with the mysteries of the pitching art.

The one brief, gloomy moment of the game for the Yanks came in the third inning, when, with two gone, and all hope practically set aside for the day, Eddie Murphy poked a single to centre field. That poke in itself was nothing to crow about, but just lamp this next paragraph and you'll see it amounted to something, and that something was victory.

Oldring? Yes, the same Rube who made a record by churning the air at the world's series last Fall. Well, he closed his eyes and swung blindly at a hopper which Keating slanted at him. Rube's bat met the ball head-on and the leather flitted on its giddy way to the right-field grand stand for a home run. Right in front of Rube as he fox-trotted home was Eddie Murphy. Even the Athletics admit that Rube was lucky.

Keating did a fine bit of pitching in the ninth inning which proved that the moist ball spinner has a bunch of courage under fire. In that dizzy ninth, Schang singled and was forced at second by Lajoie. McInnis was as safe as a Government bond on Boone's bobble of a grounder. Then Jack Barry ambled, and filled the bases.

It was a tense situation, but Keating was as big as his job and bigger. Kopf lifted a fielder's delight right into Boone's mitt and Wyckoff fanned for the third out.

In the face of Wyckoff's speed and his variety of tangents, the Yankees had little chance to display any batting prowess. They hit like a team of one-armed men who were near-sighted and also afflicted with rheumatism. That isn't meant for a knock on the Yanks as much as it is meant for a boost for young Mr. Wyckoff.

It is very evident that young Wyckoff's folks must be very much tickled that their clever son got something from his college course besides a mere education. Why, just think of it, if he wasn't able to pitch he might be a school teacher or an expert on Egyptian hieroglyphics.

And speaking about those things, it's all right to study them, as Frank Fogarty says, "if they don't get on you." Oh, say, by the way, did you want to know how the runs were made? All right, pay a little attention. In the third inning, chapter, session, or stanza, or whatever you call it, "Peck" flipped Kopf out at first.

That Kopf is the man's right name, and not one of those hills in South Africa, as you may suppose. Well, after Kopf was out, Wyckoff hoisted an easy fly to Peck. Then along came Eddie Murphy with a single, crowded closely by Rube Oldring's jolt into the grand stand.

Nary a chance did the Yanks have until the ninth. High was then tossed out at first by Wyckoff, and "Wallie" Pipp pinged a pop to Oldring. Doc Cook flayed a triple to deep centre, and then scored when Wyckoff forgot himself and opened up a wild pitch. The score:

Red Sox Win on Wild Pitch.

BOSTON, May 5.—Boehling's wild pitch with Speaker, who had tripled, on third base, gave Boston the only run scored in the game with Washington today. Both Shore and Boehling pitched themselves out of several pinches. The fielding of McNally, the Red Sox recruit infielder, again was a feature. The score:

No Luck for the White Sox.

CLEVELAND, May 5.—Cleveland defeated Chicago 1 to 0 in a pitching duel between Morton and Scott. Each allowed only four hits. Cleveland scored the only run of the game in the ninth inning. With one out, Chapman tripled. Jackson and Graney were passed purposely. Smith batted for Barbare, and sent a sacrifice fly to left field. Every Chicago batter up in the second reached first base safely—one on a pass, two on hits, and one on an error—yet Chicago failed to score, having one thrown out at home and two at third. Catcher Schalk of Chicago had his left knee hurt by a foul tip. Score:

Tigers Win in Eleventh.

ST. LOUIS, May 5.—Detroit scored three runs in the eleventh inning and defeated St. Louis, 5 to 2, here today. The locals' errors enabled the visitors to tie the score, and Lowdermilk's weakening in the final inning gave Detroit two bases on balls and two singles, upon which they scored. The score:

ALEXANDER GETS BUMPED BY GIANTS

Phillies' Great Pitcher Loses His First Game of Season—Umpires Blamed.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 5.—Grover Cleveland Alexander, the star twirler of the Phillies, lost his first championship game of the 1915 season and the Phillies slipped another cog in their rapidly reversing pennant wheel today, losing the final game with the Giants by a score of 4 to 2. It was a raw, chilly day, but enough heated arguments, hot tempers and spices were injected into the fracas to keep the small crowd of spectators warm, and some rank umpiring by a couple of Mr. Tener's arbiters helped along the discomfiture of the home rooters.

The arguments and poor work by the umpires, however, are given as no excuse for the defeat of the Phillies, who have lost four out of their last five games, but it gave the game an atmosphere of backlot pastiming. In the sixth, after the Phillies had suffered through the decisions of both Quigley and Eason, the former ejected Bobby Byrne for throwing his glove into the air on a disputed strike to Doyle. This was all right, but the same official, also Eason, permitted Captain Doyle to run three feet off third base toward the pitcher's box and hurl anything but elegant language at Alexander without even as much as a reprimand.

Quigley missed strike after strike for Alexander, who is known as one of the few pitchers who do not kick on eye-close verdicts. It was simply no use, however, for between the poor umpiring of Quigley and Eason, Alexander, who was not at his best by any means, was always in trouble, and was finally taken out of the game to allow Weiser to bat for him in the eighth.

The game was marked by good, bad, and indifferent playing, mostly on the part of the Phillies, who were in a badly shattered condition. Luderus was added to the hospital list during the morning practice, when Oeschger hit him on the elbow with a pitched ball. Whitted played first and covered the bag in splendid style. Niehoff was back on second and Paskert played centre-field. Nothing broke right for the Phillies, and everything went wrong for them, which was too much of a handicap for even Alexander to overcome.

The Phillies jumped out in front in the second inning, scoring a run on a pass to Cravath, an error by Lobert, and a sacrifice fly by Paskert, but from this on to the ninth inning they were helpless before the splendid pitching of Stroud, a recruit pitcher from Sacramento. The youngster used a slow curve which completely baffled the hard hitters of Moran's crew. Stroud curved the first strike over time and again, and it was not until the ninth inning, when it was too late, that the Phillies appeared to discover how to get at his delivery. One hit, a single by Byrne in the fifth, was all the Phillies made off Stroud from the third to the eighth inning, and by this time New York had a lead of 3 to 1.

A double by Doyle, followed by a short fly which Niehoff just failed to hold with one hand, tallied a run in the fourth. A pass to Doyle, a short single by Lobert, and Fletcher's sacrifice fly added one in the sixth, and Bancroft's fumble, a hit by pitcher, and Lobert's single gave another in the eighth. Oeschger pitched the ninth inning and doubles by Brainard and Meyers earned the Giants' fourth run.

E. Burns opened the Phillies' eighth with a hit and Dugey was sent in to run for the catcher. Weiser batted for Alexander and walked. Stock, who displaced Byrne, bunted a high bounder which Stroud fielded. Weiser held first and although Stock beat the throw, he was declared out, Dugey racing to third. During an argument among the New York players Weiser stole second, but with the chance to tie the score with a hit, Bancroft flied to Murray and Becker rolled to Doyle.

Cravath and Whitted started the ninth with singles, but Murray made a fine running catch of Niehoff's fly and Paskert popped to Lobert. Adams, who took E. Burns's place, reached first on a wild throw by Brainard, while Cravath scored. Manager Moran was forced to send in Baumgartner, a young pitcher, to bat for Oeschger, and, with a single needed to tie the score, he hit a grounder to Stroud, ending the game. The score:

NEW BASEBALL PEACE PLAN.

Federals to Enter National Agreement—Play in in World's Series.

CHICAGO, May 5.—A special to The Chicago Daily News from a staff correspondent at Baltimore says, on purported Federal League authority, that peace in the basebll world is about to be brought about on the following terms:

The Federal League to enter the national agreement as a full-fledged major organization, participating in world's championship series; Wingo, Austin, Caldwell, Perritt, and other players who jumped to the Federals and then back to organized ball again, (excepting Walter Johnson,) are to bo to the Federals. No player is to be punished for attempting jumping.

The story says that the deal is to be perfected at once, and quotes an anonymous informant as stating that Judge Landis is prepared to withhold his decision in the baseball cases until June 1 to allow time for formal signatures to the agreement, which, according to the story, is to go into effect next season.

CHICAGO, May 5.—Charles Weeghman, owner of the Chicago Federals, talking over the telephone from West Baden, Ind., said this afternoon:

"There will be peace, all right. The public is tired of baseball in the courts. Whether the agreement will call for three major leagues, or absorption of the Federals I don't know; others are carrying on the negotiations, but whatever the plan is I am ready."

JOHNSON MISUNDERSTOOD.

Baseball Leader Says He Was Misquoted in Peace Interview.

President Ban Johnson of the American League arrived here yesterday from Boston and right off the bat said that he had not only been misquoted in his interview in Boston, but was also misunderstood. Johnson's interview, stating that he had conferred with Federal League attorneys regarding the withdrawal of the suits between organized ball and the Federal League, has caused such a stir in the baseball world that Mr. Johnson is very anxious to tone down the effect of it.

Ther is no doubt, however, that Johnson and his attorneys and Phil Ball of the St. Louis "Feds," and his attorneys had a conference in Chicago and the advisability of dropping the suits now pending was discussed. Mr. Johnson, however, denies that any compromise was even discussed in relation to a settlement of the baseball war.

Holy Cross Surprises Fordham.

Holy Cross baseball team defied all tradition yesterday by defeating the Fordham nine at Fordham Field by a score of 5 to 3. It was the first time that the Worcester collegians have ever come out victorious over Fordham at the latter's field in the several generations of Maroon and Purple rivalry. Joe Martin, who scored a shutout over the Massachusetts nine last year, twirled for Fordham, but the visitors solved his delivery during the last half of the game. Daly started for Holy Cross and had considerable difficulty in finding the plate. After loading up the bases in the sixth he retired in favor of McCarthy.

Fordham scored first in the second inning. Kane singled, went to second on Viviano's sacrifice, and scored on a wild pitch by Daly. Holy Cross snatched the lead in the sixth, when four hits in a row, coupled with a poor throw to get Naughton at the plate, netted three runs. Fordham also scored in this inning, tying the tally after two men were out. Viviano and Kellither walked. Berrigan then doubled, scoring Viviano, while a pass by Daly to Martin filled the bases. McCarthy then went into the box and hit McGovern, forcing in the tying run. After that Fordham was helpless. Bunched hits by Holy Cross in the last two innings gave the visitors two more runs and spoiled a cherished Fordham tradition. The score:

LAFAYETTE BLOWS UP WITH SCORE TIED

Columbia Gets Three Runs and Victory in Seventh on Misplays.

Columbia scored a victory over the Lafayette nine yesterday afternoon on South Field by a score of 5 to 2, a lucky seventh inning enabling the Blue and White to break a tie and clinch the game. One hit and a series of weird misplays by the visiting nine in this frame gave the home team three runs. Only two runs were earned by the Columbia nine.

Lafayette outbatted the home team, but erratic work in the field proved the visitors' undoing. Two errors were made by English, the shortstop on the Pennsylvania team, and Hunt, in centre field, added to the distress by a wild throw and muffing an easy fly. The breaks were all in favor of the Columbia team, Dame Fortune smiling for the first time upon the Morningside Heights players.

George Smith pitched for Columbia, but he was not up to his usual form. Good support helped him out of more than one hole, one of the visiting batsmen being picked off at home after Shea's misplay threatened trouble for Columbia. He struck out nine batsmen, walked two and allowed nine hits.

In the fourth inning Myers, catcher of the Lafayette nine, was badly spiked when Page, in trying to get home on a grounder to second base, slid and caught Myers's forearm with his spikes. Myers was able to continue in the game after his arm had been bandaged.

The scoring started in the third inning, when Smith singled to right field, and scored on Watt's triple to the running track. Benson popped out, but Watt was able to score on the fielder's choice following Roseff's grounder.

Two bunched hits gave the visitors their only runs in the sixth frame. G. Brown drew a pass, and Edwards got on when hit by Smith. Hunt advanced both players with a sacrifice, and Helfrich scored them with his single.

The break came in the seventh. With two down, Benson drew a pass and went to second on G. Brown's balk. Roseff got on when English let a grounder through him, and both advanced on Hunt's wild throw. Friederich scored both with a single to centre. On Hunt's muff of Buncke's long fly, Friederich came all the way home. The score:

WILLIAMS HUMBLES YALE

Elis' First Defeat in Eight Games—Underwood Erratic.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 5.—Williams humbled Yale, 3 to 2, this afternoon, recording the Elis' first defeat in eight games this season and giving Williams a record of having won seven of their last nine annual matches with Yale, although all have been played on Yale soil. Yale's defeat was due to Underwood's erratic pitching in the second inning as well as to Williams's brilliant all-around playing.

Pitcher Stanley Young of the Purple figured in all the run getting. His overthrow of first base in the third inning in handling Easton's bund scored Le Gore from second and Johnson from first with all the runs Yale accumulated. Young batted the Yale pitchers for three hits, his first scoring Michler from third and Parsons from second in the first inning and his second single in the seventh driving home Parsons from third with the winning run. Neyland Stops Penn State Rally.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., May 5.—Penn State bowed to the Army today, 9 to 4. The cadets' victory was made easy by the poor work of Wardwell early in the game, three runners tallying in the opener on two hits, three passes, a hit batsman, and a wild pitch. The Army put the game safely away in the fourth, when they found Wardwell for three singles, which, coupled with a steal, netted them two runs. State scored in the fourth and fifth, Sarcka and Oliphant contributing by some weird battery work. Again in the sixth, with two down, State loomed formidably and Sarcka was ready for the "hook," when a hot one off Crawford's bat put him out of business, caroming off his ankle and injuring him painfully. He retired and "Bob" Neyland took up the cudgels, with the bags full. The Army star hurler went in "cold" and passed the first batter, forcing in a run. After that Penn State was easy for the big Texan, and it was all over, so far as they were concerned. The score:

Brown Wins Game from Amherst.

AMHERST, Mass., May 5.—Brown won from Amherst, 6 to 1, today, four hits in the second inning netting the visitors four runs, which decided the game. Amherst touched up Cram for seven hits, but the Brown pitcher kept them well scattered. Three-base hits by Babington and Cram of the Browns featured the batting. The score:

DODGERS NO MATCH FOR BOSTON BRAVES

Bill James Pitches Stallings's Team to Victory in Last Game of Series by 6 to 1.

The Braves hopped out on Ebbets Field yesterday afternoon in full war paint and tomahawked Robbie's fond dreams of taking the series from the world's champions. When George Stallings left town last night another Brooklyn scalp was pinned to his belt. It was Big Bill James who wreaked vengeance on the Dodgers, the same Big Bill who chipped out a place for himself in the baseball hall of fame at the last world's series. From the way he pitched yesterday it might almost have been another championship. The Dodgers were as helpless as babes before his art and when the sun peeped out just as the game was drawing to a close it was to shine on a Boston victory by a score of 6 to 1.

The Braves had learned a certain amount of respect for the Brooklyn batsmen on Monday and they took no chances yesterday. The memory of the treatment of Dick Rudolph was too recent to be disregarded, and when they assigned James to do the twirling they were playing their best bet. It wasn't particularly cheering baseball weather, but the men from the Hub played in the same snappy manner that marked their work at the end of last season. It must have been that Brooklyn fans had an inkling of what was in store for their team, for they were conspicuous by their absence. Figuratively there was only a handful of people in the stands.

Sir Raleigh Aitchison essayed to bring another victory to the Brooklyn standard and he failed completely. He lasted the game out, but in the fifth it looked as if he would have to make way for another. It was this inning which brought the Dodgers to defeat. Four hits wents hot off the Braves' bats, a three-bagger by Cather making a clean-up when the bases were doing tenement duty. Four runs were scored, and with the visitors' infield tightened up to drum-head tension there was little hope that the Brooklyn batsmen would be able to slip over hits that would come anywhere near making it a close fight. The only run which the Dodgers sent across the rubber was in the second on two hits and an error by Magee. In no other inning were they able to get more than one safety. Twice James was touched for a double, once by Zach Wheat and the other time by Daubert, but the runners pined away on the bases.

In the third inning Brooklyn had a good chance to score, but the opportunity went by without a welcome. James, after he had struck out O'Mara, pitched eight successive balls to Daubert and Stengel. With only one out and Wheat and Cutshaw following, runs looked as sure as snow in Winter. But it was a false alarm. Wheat couldn't find the ball for anything but a long fly and Cutshaw followed the same path to oblivion.

The first Brooklyn run came in the second. After Wheat had flied out Cutshaw dropped a Texas leaguer over second base and went to second when Magee let the ball go past him. Myers flied out to left and Schultz drew a pass. Then came a sizzling double by McCarthy over the third sack good for two bases and Cutshaw scored.

The Braves started off great in the fifth. Smith and Maranville singled to left and Gowdy shot one past Daubert that scored Smith. James struck out and Moran hit to O'Mara, who threw out Maranville at the plate. Egan walked and the bases were full. Cather then crashed into the ball for a triple that made a clean-up. The final two runs were in the ninth as a result of a double by Maranville, a triple by Gowdy, and a single to centre by Moran. The score:

FEDERAL LEAGUE.

St. Louis Blanks Brookfeds 3 to 0—Magee Scouting.

While Manager Lee Magee was away yesterday scouting for new players, his proteges were shut out by St. Louis 3 to 0 at Washington Pak. It took St. Louis 8 innings to get started, but when they did go after twirler Ed. Finneran they scored three runs on six clean singles. In the eighth, three singles netted St. Louis one run, and three more safeties in the final inning scored 2 runs. Dave Davenport, who was on the firing line for the Westerners, pitched gilt-edged ball and only in the first inning was he in danger of being scored on. In the opening session the Brookfeds had a man on each base with one down, but Myers and Holt knocked out easy high ones that were gobbled up by the fielders, and left their team mates stranded on the bags.

Finneran pitched very creditably, as fas as as allowing any runs were concerned, until the eigth. In the fourth St. Louis had three men on bases but Bortch flied out to Anderson retiring the side and saved Finneran. Only one Westerner got on base in the next three innings ad he was left high and dry at second. But in the eighth things were different. Borton flied out Miller drove a hot one into left field and Chapman followed with another to the same place, sending Miller to third. Vaughn made it three straight into left and Miller tallied. Johnson and Davenport flied out and left Chapman and Vaughn on third and first.

In the ninth Bridwell and Tobin singled and each advanced a base on Drake's sacrifice. Borton stepped into one of Finneran's shoots and when it was returned from right field, Bridwell and Tobin had scored, but Borton was caught off second. The small gathering of fans called on the Brookfeds for one of those ninth inning rallies that have so often carried the Ward outfit to victory and Evans responded with a single. He took second on a passed ball but there he remained as Myers, Holt and Gagnier went out vainly trying for a safety.

In the fourth inning Davenport was hit in the back of the head by one of Finneran's offerings and the game was delayed for a few minutes. Davenport did not want a runner and went to first himself. He started for second when Bridwell hit a foul fly and turned on his ankle wrenching his knee. However, these few minor injuries did not interfere with his pitching ability: The score:

COFFEY KNOCKS OUT REICH IN THE 'THIRD'

Big Madison Sq. Garden Crowd Sees Heavyweight Bout—Ex-Amateur Seems Frightened.

Whatever visions Al Reich entertained for the heavyweight championship were effectually dissipated last night at Madison Square Garden, when he was knocked out in the third round of a scheduled ten-round bout by Jim Coffey, the Dublin Giant, after one of the most gruelling contests witnessed in recent years in this city between heavy men. For a short contest more actual blows were struck than the boxing patrons usually see in ten rounds. It was clean, hard punching, and every blow that reached its mark left its effect. The two boxers entered the ring with a grim determination to end the contest as quickly as possible, and as a result there was not a dull moment while the pair were in action.

Time alon saved Reich from a knock-out in the second round. A few seconds before the gong sounded Coffey staggered Reich with hard right and left smashes in the face, and then when the former amateur wa s all but helpless Coffey sent in a crushing blow that landed o nthe jaw. Reich went down, and was on the canvas-covered floor when the bell saved him. It is doubtful whether Reich woud have been able to stand off the rushes of the Roscommon Giant had there been another fifty seconds to the round, although he undoubtedly would have regained his feet inside of the regulation ten seconds.

Reich missed an opportunity to turn the tide in his favor in this round. Coffey had a decided advantage over his man in the first session of the contest, when Reich, acting under the advice of his seconds, changed his tactics when he face dhis opponent in the second round. Instead of waiting for Coffey to lead, Reich assumed the offensive, and, breaking through his opponent's guard, delivered a number of telling blows on the jaw. Before the middle of the round Coffey was staggering from the effects of the pounding he received. The finish appeared imminent, and Reid's supporters shouted to their man to end the contest, which to the majority of the spectators appeared an easy task. The former amateur neglected his gold opportunity and resorted to his defensive tactics. Coffey in wild desperation rushed Reich to the ropes, where he kept him until he was able to send him to the floor. This was Reich's first and only real chance to win the bout, and when he missed this chance he was an easy victim for Coffey.

A representative gathering witnessed the contest, reminding the patrons of the days of the Horton law, when the contests at the Garden approached the championship stage. Probably 10,000 persons, including about one hundred women, were crowded into the building. It was a demonstrative but orderly gathering. There was a crush at the gates, but the reserves under Captain Seaton formed the patrons who stormed the doors into a line which completely surrounded the Garden.

The match, which perhaps attracted more attention than any since the passage of the Frawley law, had been pending for months. Reich was hot on the trial of the Dublin giant, and for several weeks had a deposit of $2,500 in the hands of a sporting authority to clinch the contest, but it was not until Porky Flynn, a veteran of the ring, out-pointed the former champion a few weeks ago at the Federal A. C. that the former car conductor agreed to sign articles, which resulted in last night's contest.

Many ring experts went so far as to accuse Coffey of being afraid of Reich and so eager was the latter for the match that it was openly stated that unless he succeed in bringing Coffey to terms, an impromptu battle might take place in the street should the two men accidentally meet.

Therecords of the two men left little to choose between them. Coffey had been victorious over men of somewhat higher grade, but up to the Flynn contest Reich had done oil that had been asked of him and had appeared more rough and enduring than his conquerer. It was, however, conceded that Coffey's superior ring experience would be a valuable asset to him when the men faced each otoher.

n rectn form Coffey was the logical favorite and many bets of 8 to 5 were laid on him. That this confidence was justified was shown by the result, and as was predicted Reich proved to be an easy mark for Coffey's straight left, although when Al choose to take a hand in the mixing, he showed that he could punch just as hard and as straight as his opponent.

Coffey to a great extent depended upon his straight left in the first round, which served to weaken his opponent, and paved the road for the hard smashes which followed in the subsequent rounds. Reich showed that he had cultivated during his training a system to escape the thrusts of Coffey's powerful left, which proved the most serious obstacle to his coming out on top. Reich showed he possessed a dangerous right, which at times was more efective than his opponent's left, and while there was always a chance that he would land this and upset all predictions, he neglected to use it just at the time it would have done the most good. Coffey, on the other hand, realized that he possessed a knockout blow, and he was not slow to take advantage of it. He forced the fighting most of the time and when he did so he was all over his opponent, but Reich made the mistake in waiting patiently for an openine to let drive his powerful right hand, but with the exception of one brief spell, Coffey refused to be trapped.

Reich is somewhat of a mystery as a boxer to the patrons of the sport. There is no question about his boxing skill nor his ability to put plenty of steam behind his blows. This was shown when he assumed the aggressive in the second round and had Coffey in a bad way. But it was at this point when the finer nature of his makeup developed itself and proved that he lacks those essentials such as bulldog tenacity, rough aggressiveness and the nature which goes to make up the present-day boxer.

SPECULATORS ARRESTED.

As a result of the Coffey-Reich bout there was a big crowd around Madison Square Garden last night, and detectives were scattered throughout the crowd watching for attempts at ticket speculation. Eight persons were arrested by Detectives Noyes, Brady, Schmidt, and O'Brien of the Third Inspection District, charged with ticket speculation, and were locked up in the East Twenty-second Street Station.

The prisoners described themselves as Max Harris, 24 years old, painter, living at 210 West Forty-second Street; Harry Davis, 33 years old, salesman, of 220 West Forty-first Street; Samuel Blake, 41 years old, salesman, of 1,528 Brayant Avenue, the Bronx; Abraham Dubin, 32 years old, a clerk, of 302 West Forty-fourth Street; Benjamin Jones, 27 years old, a clerk, of 227 West Forty-third Street; Benjamin Cohen, 34 years old, a clerk, of 346 Pennsylvania Avenue, Brooklyn; Bruno Marken, 30 years old, restaurant keeper, of the St. Paul Hotel, Columbus Avenue and Sixtieth Street, and George A. Cook, 18 years old, a clerk, of 214 Halsey Street, Brooklyn.

The detectives asserted that the prisoners were selling $5 tickets on the street for from $7 to $8. Magistrate Ten Eyck, in the Nigth Court, discharged Jones, and fined Harris, Davis, Blake, Dubin, and Cohen $3 each.

FIGHT FILMS CASE LOST.

Federal Act Barring Them Constitutional, Says Judge Haight.

The application of T. Lawrence Weber for an injunction to restrain Frederick S. Freed, Deputy United States Collector of Customs of the port of Newark, from interfering with the plaintiff in entering through the Newark Custom House photographic films of the Willard-Johnson prize fight at Havana, Cuba, on April 5, was denied by Judge Thomas Haight of the United States District Court in his chambers in the Jersey City Post Office yesterday afternoon.

The application was made by Towne & Spellman of Newark on the ground that the act of Congress of July 31, 1912, under which the films were barred is unconstitutional because Congress exceeded its powers as defined in the commerce clause.

Judge Haight's decision says the constitutionality of the act of Congress of July 31, 1912, was the only question before him. He holds the act to be constitional. United States District Attorney J. Warren Davis and Joseph L. Bodine made the argument for the Government.

Benjamin F. Spellman of the plaintiffs' counsel said Judge Haight would sign appeal papers today and that the judge would facilitate the appeal so it may be heard by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Trenton next Monday. If unsuccessful there an appeal would be taken to the United States Supreme Court.

Weber said in his complaint that delay depreciates the value of the pictures, and that they would be worthless unless shown in the United States within four months.

ITALIANS WANT TO COME.

Athletic Team of Six Would Compete in National Championships.

Little hope is held out that any of the warring nations of Europe will be represented in the American national track and field championships to be held in connection with the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco in August, but if the fair authorities will help defray part of their expenses a team of six of the best athletes in Italy will take part in the games. One of them will be Emilio Lunghi, the Italian middle-distancer, who in 1909, at Montreal, Can., made the world's half-mile record of 1:52 4-5. This mark has since been reduced to 1:52½ by Ted Meredith of the University of Pennsylvania.

Last week S. Crine of the St. Bartholomew Club received a letter from Claudio Carpi of the Sport A. C., asking him to make whatever arrangements he could for the Italian athletes. Crine turned the matter over to Frederick W. Rubien, Chairman of the National Championship Committee, who has placed the Italian's proposition before the proper exposition authorities. All the foreigners ask is their transportation from New York to San Francisco and return. They will come across the ocean at their own expense.

In the team would be Carpi, a sprinter who has run fifty yards in 5 2-3 seconds and the century in 10 1-3. Another is Franco Giongo, also a short-distance man, who has been timed in 11 seconds for 100 meters, a very good performance; in 17 seconds for 150 meters, and 22 43-100 for 200 meters.

Then there is Lunghi, who claims the world's record for 1,000 meters of 2:31, although the American Almanac credits Mickler of Germany with the best mark of 2:32 2-5. Lunghi represents the Sport Pedestra of Genoa. Sperino Carlo of the Union Sport A. C., Busto, is a long-distance runner, and holds all the Italian records from 8 to 20 miles. He is desirous of competing in the Exposition Marathon. He has turned 18 kilometers or 18,000 yards in one hour. This is his best performance.

Another crack Italian who is desirous of making the long trip is Carlo Ondreoli of the International A. C., Milan, a jumper, who has a record of 6 feet 1⅝ inches in the running high and of 4 feet 6½ inches in the standing high jump.

The last of the squad is Guido Caldi, Atlantic A. C., of Bergano, whose premier performance is 2:01 43-100 for 800 meters.

The squad will be in charge of Carpi.

SHARP WORDS FOR A. A. U.

Terence Farley Criticises Committee for Action in Disputed Race.

The bitter feeling of the Irish-American A. C. against the Registration Committee of the A. A. U. as the result of the latter organization's decision in the much discussed "Fourteenth Regiment relay case" is reflected in the three pamphlets of testimony, and comment on the matter which was mailed yesterday to the Board of Managers of the Metropolitan Association who will decide whether the decision of the Registration Board should be set aside or the case reopened as the Irish-American Club has asked in an appeal. The Registration Committee also says a few warm things about the Winged Fist organization, but Terence Farley, as delegate for the Irish club, is more pointed in his comment.

In relating some of the "facts" in connection with the matter Farley says: "One of the sapien members of he Registration Committee 'butted in' and ordered the referee (A. L. Kline) to hold up the prizes and informed him that he had no right to allow the Irish team to compete in the final of the race. In obedience to his commands the prizes were held up. Thereupon the members of the Registration Committee 'investigated.' How the matter came up in the committee for action does not appear. There was no protest made to it, nor, so far as the record discloses, no complaint, but still it has seen fit to interfere in a matter in which we contend it had no concern. To speak plainly, it was none of their business." The Registration Committee member Farley refers to is John M. Connolly.

A mass of conflicting testimony appears in the pamphlets. Elliott Bigelow, who was picking third man in the race in question, gave testimony that it was a Millrose A. A. man who finished third, and not an Irish clubman. He informed the Registration Committee the man he picked for third bore the number 162 and was a Millrose representative, yet on the program 162 is indicated as H. Foster of the Salem-Crescent A. C., whose team did not take part in the disputed heat.

NORWEGIAN EXPERT TRIUMPHS AT NETS

Favorable weather conditions brought out many of the contestants in the West Side Tennis Club Spring tournament yesterday on the club courts at Forest Hills, L. I., and several of the classes were advanced to the semi-final rounds. Miss Molla Bjurstedt of Norway, winner of the national indoor championship of America, was again seen to advantage in her match with Miss Florence Ballin, sister of the former Princeton football Captain. Although the contest was decided in favor of Miss Bjurstedt in straight sets, it was one of the most interesting of the class.

Miss Ballin, who played from the back court, was unable to get her drives away from the indoor title holder, and many of her attempts to drop the ball in the deep corner of the court were frustrated by the speed and cleverness of her opponent. Miss Bjurstedt played a fast game in the first set, and won rather easily. As the second game progressed Miss Ballin improved and led, 4 to 1, when Miss Bjurstedt started a rally which carried her to 5—all. Miss Ballin played pluckily and at times outdrove the Norwegian player, but the latter seemed to have enough in reserve to enable her to score the points when necessary. Miss Ballin carried the second set to 9—7 before her opponent won.

In the second match of the women's singles Miss H. French won from Mrs. Robert Le Roy after a spectacular contest of three sets. Miss French secured the lead in the first set, which went to deuce; but dropped the second to Mrs. Le Roy. The third and deciding set was well contested, but Miss French's splendid net work gave her the victory.

By their victory over Mrs. R. J. Pope and Mrs. de Gersdorf in the womin's doubles Mrs. Marshall McLean and Mrs. Barger-Wallach reached the final round and will probably be opposed by Miss Bjurstedt and Miss Ballin, who have already defeated two of the strongest teams in the tournament. The final in this match promises to be the best contested in the tournament.

A big gallery was disappointed in the doubles match owing to the defaulting of Frederick B. Alexander and Harold H. Hackett and Theodore R. Pell and partner. Washburn and Shephard were drawn against Alexander and Hackett and a good match was expected. The summary:

Second Round:—Watson M. Washburn and Gustave F. Touchard defeated Frederick B. Alexander and Harold H. Hackett by default; Ralph L. Baggs and Mr. Baggs defeated R. K. Tomlinson and Arthur B. Cragin by default.

Men's Doubles, Class B, Second Round—W. T. Ackerland and C. J. Post defeated C. C. Edwards and E. S. Moore, 6—2, 7—5.

Men's Doubles, Class C, Third Round.—O. L. Becker and E. T. Crilley defeated Mr. Worth and Mr. Cunningham, 6—1, 8—6.

Women's Singles, Class A, Third Round.—Miss Molle Bjurstedt defeated Miss Florence Ballin, 6—3, 5—7; Miss H. French defeated Mrs. Robert Le Roy, 7—5, 4—6, 6—3.

Women's Doubles, Fourth Round—Miss Edith White and Miss E. Gauthey defeated Miss Katherine Force and Miss Abby Morrison, 6—4, 9—7.

Semi-final Round.—Mrs. Marshall McLean and Mrs. Barger Wallach defeated Mrs. R. J. Pope and Mrs. de Gersdorf, 6—2, 5—7, 6—0.

Bronx Tennis Championship.

S. Howard Voshell and Walter Merrill Hall, former holders of the Bronx lawn tennis championship, have entered the tournament which will begin Saturday on the courts of the Bedford Park Lawn Tennis Club at Mosholu Parkway and Perry Avenue. The entry list already received by A. J. Ostendorf, the referee, is larger than usual. It includes G. Carlton Shafer, who won the New Jersey State title last season; Wylie C. Grant, Arthur M. Lovibond, Dr. William Rosenbaum, Charles L. Johnston, Jr., former New England intercollegiate champion; Abraham Bassford, Jr., R. L. James, Vanderbilt B. Ward, who has paired with Allan Tobey in the doubles; King Smith, the regimental champion; Charles Chambers, Ralph L. Baggs, and Frederick C. Baggs, W. Halsey Wood, the former Columbia University star, and others. The tournament is the first of the championships under the direction of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association, to be held in the Metropolitan district. Ostendorf has arranged to make the draw f or the singles tomorrow at 5 o'clock P. M. All of the matches will be the best two out of three sets, with the exception of the finals, which will be the best three out of five sets.

Barnard Tennis Team Wins, 3 to 2.

The Barnard tennis team won from the Ethical Culture tennis players yesterday by the score of 3 to 2. Barnard won the doubles and took one of the three games in the singles. N. Alexander and T. Isaacs of Barnard won from R. S. Goldman and W. B. Goldberg of Ethical Culture, 6—2 and 6—4. In the singles N. Alexander of Barnard won from W. B. Goldberg of Ethical Culture, 6—2 and 6—2; N. A. Pathcart of Ethical Culture won from W. Miller of Barnard, 8—2, 4—6, 8—6 and R. S. Goldman of Ethical Culture won from T. Isaacs of Barnard, 6—4, 4—6, 8—6.

Fordham and Stevens in Tennis Tie.

Fordham tied with Stevens Tech at tennis yesterday at the Fordham courts, by a score of 3 to 3. Each team took two of the singles and one in the doubles. The summarries:

Singles.—Moore, Fordham, defeated Appleton, Stevens, 6—3, 6—3; Benzan, Fordham, defeated Wiley Stevens, 5—7, 8—6, 7—5; Schuyler, Stevens, defeated Reilly, Fordham, 6—2, 4—6, 8—3; Williamston, Stevens, defeated Dodin, Fordham, 6—3, 6—1.

Doubles—Wiley and Williamston, Stevens, defeated Moore and Benzan, Fordham, 6—3, 6—3; Dodin and Riley, Fordham, defeated Schuyler and Scott, Stevens, 6—1, 6—2.

Tennis at Westchester C. C.

An exhibition doubles match between Hackett and Alexander and Behr and Pell will formally open the tennis season of the Country Club of Westchester, near Hartsdale, N. Y., on Saturday afternoon. The contest will be preceded by a canoe race down the Bronx River, which runs alongside the clubhouse.

NUCKOLS FINED, THEN REINSTATED

After a two days' session the Boardl of Revie wof the Nationa Trotting Association finished its semi-annual meeting yesterday at the Murray Hill Hotel. A number of interesting decisions were handed down in cases which had been hanging fire for several months. After settling a lot of other routine business, the Board adjourned to meet next November.

The most prominent case in which a verdict was rendered, was that of Vance Nuckos. The case arose from Nuckols refusing to hand over the horse, Andral, which he was driving at the Autumn meeting at Rockport, Ohio, when he was requested to do so by the judge.

Nuckols had won two heats with the horse and lost the third. Thereupon, R. S. Strader, who was the official, told him to turn the horse over to another driver. Nuckols refused to do so, and he was immediately suspended by Strader. The crowd took the part of the driver, and swarmed on the track, so that the racing could not be continued. Two of the judges then conferred and reinstated Nuckols, who not only drove the horse, but won the race.

At the meeting of the Board of Review last December, the Board ruled that the judges had power to expel a driver, but not to reinstate him, and ordered that Nuckols remain expelled. Yesterday the Board reinstated Nuckols after paying a fine of $100.

Alfred Lathrop, Canandaigus, N. Y., who was expelled in 1900 in connection with a "ringer" which was run at Baltimore, Md., during that year was reinstated. E. A. Maney, who had been under the ban since 1912 for running Jerry Junior as Jerald Junior at Potsdam, N. Y., was reinstated. Hal. Oatman, Fond du Lac, Wis., made an application for reinstatement. Oatman's offense was that of renaming and running the horse Joe Bailey as Franklin E. during the meetings at Salisbury and Baltimore, Md. The application was granted. R. Walters, Lisbon, Ohio, who had driven the mare, Carry M., in a race while she bore the name of Babe Actell, "to oblige a friend," was once more placed in good standing after a year's punishment.

The Alabama State Exposition Company of Montgomery, Ala., and its officers were suspended for the non-payment of premiums. The complaint was made by George Slyde of Jerome, Ala.

The European was entered into two cases before the board yesterday. The first was that of H. H. James, Hamilton, Ont., who was temporarily suspended for the non-payment of his entrance fees on the horse Vaster at the Columbus and Detroit meetings. The case was similar to that of S. A. Procter, Toronto, Ont., with his horse, Grand Opera. Both men applied for reinstatement. Their application was granted, as it was decided that their actions were the result "of an Order in Council of the British Empire."

J. Fortner of Brydon, N. Y., and the mare Brooklet Chimes, 2:13¾, alias Wilkalina, for starting out of its class and changing of its name at Courtlandt, N. Y., were expelled. Walter Jenkins, Findlay, Ohio, who was expelled in 1912 for hitting another driver during the Columbus meeting in that year, was reinstated.

Pringle and Hoyt Golf Leaders.

Members of the New York Golf Club have completed their qualification round for the May tournament, and the first match round will be run off at the convenience of the contestants. J. M. Pringle and F. H. Hoyt, both with liberal handicaps, led the field in the medal round with respective scores of 88, 20—68 and 96, 28—68. The draw for match play in the first sixteen is as follows: Thomas McConnell, Mutchler vs. Lange, Linton vs. Mendel, Fitzpatrick vs. Davidson, Baker vs. Pringle, Turner vs. Truax, Long vs. Tiller, and Warner vs. Grover.

Semi-Finals in Panama Golf.

OAKLAND, Cal., May 5.—As a result of match play in the second round of the Panama-Pacific handicap golf tournament today Heinrich Schmidt, Claremont Country Club, will play Warner Sherwood of the same club, and H. E. Sanderson, San Francisco Golf and Country Club, will play M. A. McLaughlin, Midwick Club, Pasadena, Cal., tomorrow in the semi-finals to be played over eighteen holes on the Exposition course.

Fifth Straight Win for Kingsley.

Kingsley School scored its fifth straight victory yesterday, defeating Boonton High School at Essex Fells, N. J., 13 to 7. Boonton held a lead of 5 to 2 up to the eighth inning, when five singles, two doubles, a brace of bases on balls, and an error netted Kingsley eleven runs. Fields and Sterry were the points for Kingsley, and Henron and Cary was the pattery for Boonton.

Broadway A. C. Offers Good Card.

Two ten-round contests will be staged by the Broadway Sporting Club on Saturday night. Soldier Barfield, the welterweight champion of the United States Navy, will oppose Jack Toland of Philadelphia in the feature event, and Marty Allen and Bushey Graham, two promising featherweights, will appear in the second bout.

Harvard Crew in Time Trial.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 5.—Harvard's football squad lost a prominent candidate today when it was announced that John A. Gilman, a tackle, had left college. Gilman's work was conspicuous on the 1913 team, but he was unable to play last Fall.

DOG SHOW AT THE McALPIN.

E. R. Wilbur's Heilborn's Queen Takes Highest Honors.

There was a slight falling off in the number of contestants in the fifth meeting of the Tog Dog Club at the Hotel McAlpin yesterday, owing to the lateness of the season, but there were one of the most interesting of the series, enough dogs on hand to make the show. E. R. Wilbur's pretty Boston terrier, Heilborn's Queen, was adjudged the "best in the show," but her superiority over Mr. Poffet's Miniature Rival was not very marked. By scoring over all her other rivals, Heilborn's Queen gained the third leg on the Vermilax trophy for her owner. This trophy must be won three times by the same owner before becoming his or her personal property. Legs have been won on the big cup by Mrs. Brewster's Griffon Dora Dora and Mrs. Carl Erllman's Bow Gow of Croyden.

A victory that met with approval was that of Mrs. I. Paul's Bella in the Pomeralan division.

Other victors in winning classes were:

Pekingese.—Mrs. E. N. Hester's Broadcloth Beetle.

Ruby Spaniels.—Miss Lithaur's Tom Thumb.

Boston Terriers.—E. R. Wilbur's Heilborn Queenie.

French Bulls—Mr. Poffet's Miniature Rival.

Best Puppy.—Mrs. H. A. Baxter's Al Gee Tarza.

De Oro to Play Moore.

George W. Moore and Alfred de Oro will play their match for the three-cushion carrom billiard championship in the Concert Hall of the New York Theatre on the nights of May 17, 18, and 19. They will play 150 points each night. The match will be for a purse of $500 and the trophy, which must be continuously defended for twelve months. Moore won the title in the Chicago tournament, in which twelve players competed. He won nine games. Huey and John Daly won an equal number. Playing off the triple tie, Moore won both of his matches, while Huey defeated Daly. Moore's success in this tournament establishes his right to the leadership, for the time being, of the three-cushion experts. De Oro for twenty-eight years has been a remarkable match performer at pocket billiards and three cushions. The Lambert Trophy, which introduced a three-cushion championship, is his personal property.

Cutler Again Wins with Cue.

Albert G. Cutler of Boston won his third consecutive victory over Tom Gallagher in their five nights' 18.2 balk-line billiard match at Maurice Daly's Billiard Academy, Forty-ninth Street and Broadway, last night by the score of 204 to 93.

Harvard Loses Football Candidate.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 5.—Over the same mile and seven-eighths course on the Charles River where Harvard will row Cornell on May 22, the Crimson varsity crew rowed a trial race against the freshmen today. The underclass men were allowed a start of two and one-quarter lengths and were nosed out at the finish. The Coaches expressed satisfaction with the varsity's showing. No time was announced.

COLUMBIA AT PRINCETON.

'Varsity Will Practice on Lake Carnegie for Race on Saturday.

Columbia's oarsmen will leave this morning for Princeton for two days of practice as a preliminary to the triangular regatta Saturday afternoon on Lake Carnegie. The Blue and White sweep-swingers will match blades with the University of Pennsylvania and Princeton eights. This will be Columbia's first contest of the season.

Jim Rice, coach of the Columbia crews, had the 'Varsity shell shipped to Princeton yesterday noon. He expects to get his men out on Lake Carnegie this afternoon, and will give them two workouts on Friday. The arsmen from Morningside Heights are all in good condition, and are counted upon to maintain Columbia's rowing standard.

Among those who will be taken to Princeton on the columbia squad are: Captain Sanborn, Francis Simonds, Robert Spurgeon, Albert Cronenberg, Henry Munroe, Norman Bratton, H. M. Tichborn, Oscar Myers, and Coxswain A. P. Paddock.

The York
(By the House of Kuppenheimer)

YOUNG men are all greatly taken with the YORK—our new one-button model. A high novelty, but easy and pleasing, and correct to a hair. A favorite thé dansant style.
Note the long graceful sweep of the coat front, rolled back to show the waistcoat with its soft roll collar and the top button open. The coat closes with one button, which is placed at the waist-line, accentuating the shaped military effect at the waist and back.
This is but one of the modish Kuppenheimer Models. The elements of grace and style assurance are in all of them—in marked contrast to the uneasy spirit of so much unauthorized "Fashions for Young Men."
With the fastest-growing young men's business in America, two things are clear: We are making the right clothes, and men everywhere are more and more alive to the Kuppenheimer dealer and the values he offers them.
Prices—$20 to $40
Kuppenheimer Clothes are sold by a representative store in nearly every Metropolitan center of the United States and Canada. Your name on a post card will bring you our Book of Fashions.

THE PEACE OF THE ORIENT.

For two good reasons Japan ought to make a treaty of firm and lasting peace with Germany before she proceeds to enforce her ultimatum upon China. The first is that, according to the general understanding of the Western world, she is attempting to assume control of the Government, the fortunes, the destiny of the Chinese Republic in a distinctly German manner, in the manner which the great teachers of political theory in Germany have declared to be the true method of increasing the territorial domain, the commerce, and the power of a State. For a second reason, if she now proceeds by armed force to enforce the demands China has rejected, she will tear up, as unconsidered scraps of paper, two solemn treaties, one with Great Britain and one with the United States.

The Anglo-Japanese Treaty of Alliance of July 13, 1911, renewing with some changes the treaty of August, 1905, in its preamble declares one of the objects of the treaty to be:

> The preservation of the common interests of all the Powers in China by insuring the independence and the integrity of the Chinese Empire and the principle of equal opportunities for the commerce and industry of all nations in China.

In the Root-Takahira agreement Japan makes these same pledges to the United States. Sir EDWARD GREY said in the House of Commons on Tuesday that he was not aware that "any official and accurate version of the demands" made upon China by Japan had yet been published. That is very singular, but in spite of the assurances of Count OKUMA enough is known of the demands to give rise to grave apprehension that they are quite incompatible with the obligations Japan has entered into with Great Britain and the United States. Article V. of the demands, which China has rejected, would give Japan powers of control in the republic that could be regarded in no other way than as a diminution of sovereignty. The Japanese Minister of Justice, Mr. OZAKI, has said that Japan "is determined upon the acceptance of its program for solidifying the peace of the Orient." The peace of the Orient on Japanese terms is manifestly based upon the subjugation of China. If the republic grants these demands she will wear the yoke of Japan.

What China will do or can do in resistance to the aggressions of her better-organized, better-equipped, and, in the military sense, much more powerful neighbor, it is hard to see. In numbers China is immense, but her people lack that national consciousness, that common understanding and purpose that are of the very essence of power. Had they but a tithe of that patriotism which unites the German nation they would never be molested by Japan. Indeed one of the most disquieting aspects of Japanese domination is presented by the fear, and the very great probability, that it would be the Japanese policy to keep the Chinese people as they are, to obstruct progress, oppose enlightenment, and stand in the way of the advance of the Chinese toward their higher destiny as an intelligent people imbued with modern ideas and equipped with modern facilities of communication. All these would inevitably tend to make the subject State the master of its master, for if the spirit of progress should once seize hold of the Chinese people and they should move rapidly forward to the position the Japanese have taken with such marvelous promptness, there would be an end of Japanese control, and the terms of peace in the Orient would be dictated by China.

Out of this ill wind there may come both good and evil for us. We may lose our trade opportunities with China as they have existed and which we have hoped largely to extend. Opportunity may come in a new form—for the furnishing of capital, for instance. Japan has no supplies of capital commensurate with the needs she will have if she is to undertake the development of new industries in China. On the other hand, we may reasonably expect an abatement of anxiety as to our relations with the Japanese Government. The California land question remains to be adjusted, and there is the still more delicate question of the naturalization of Japanese in this country. With her new preoccupations and her new opportunities in China these matters will have a diminished interest for Japan. She will find abundant scope for all her expanding energies in the vast country which she evidently aims to bring within her sphere of influence.

Moreover, the present procedures of Japan in China and her apparent disregard of treaty obligations will array against her the entire Western world. If her aims and her methods actually are what from the evidence at hand they seem to be, and the desperate step taken by China in resisting her demands is the best possible proof of their unreasonableness, then it is difficult to see where in all Europe or in the New World she could look for sympathy or for any aid and comfort. Undoubtedly she has chosen well and shrewdly the occasion for extending her control over China. The tremendous struggle in Europe precludes any interference from that quarter, and from our complacent behavior when Secretary KNOX's plan for neutralization of the Manchurian railways was rejected and from our withdrawal of participation in the six-Power loan, Japan would be justified in assuming that we set no great value upon our present interests and prospective opportunities in the Far East.

THE ALBANY POST ROAD GRAB.

The determined campaign renewed yearly by traction interests of Westchester County resulted in the passage on April 22 last of the Slater bill repealing the Burns law, enacted twenty years ago, to prevent the construction of trolley roads on the crowded Albany Post Road. The restriction is more than ever needed now. If Governor WHITMAN should sign the Slater bill he would ignore not only the rights of residents along the Post Road in Westchester, who were invited by the State to build on the express condition that trolleys would not be permitted to invade that territory, but the rights and safety of thousands who use the road to its full capacity for vehicular traffic.

Narrow, steep, and winding in many places, a trolley line along this road between Yonkers and North Tarrytown would be dangerous. The Governors of the Automobile Club of America have shown that local residents have always opposed the legislative campaign; that the motor-bus service along the route, combined with the train service of the New York Central Railroad, is ample, and that the proposed line would be a menace. The Hewitt bill, a companion measure to the Slater bill, empowers the State Commissioner of Highways and village and town officials to permit the construction of tracks on the historic highway. Both bills are contrary to the public interest, and should be vetoed.

NON-POLITICAL BANKING.

The transfer of 123 banks of New Jersey to the New York Federal Reserve District is a matter of so little consequence to New York that it can be discussed with a spirit of detachment. On the other hand it is a matter of so much consequence to the country that its significance ought to be remarked. The change will cause the addition of $1,950,300 to the Federal Reserve banking capital of New York and will increase the deposits of the Federal Reserve Bank of this district from $103,837,000 to $107,001,000. There are several banking institutions in this Federal Reserve District with larger capital and deposits individually. In the aggregate the banking capital and deposits of New York are so large that the New Jersey resources, which are welcome, never would be missed. New York is not asking for the change of their banking relations. The amalgamation is at the motion of the small institutions, and is approved by a body of disinterested banking authority.

Therein lies the significance of the matter. The change is necessary because unnatural relations were established by political bankers. The change is ordered because the country's banking is now in the control of competent managers, who are bankers first and last and not politicians at all. There is not a whisper of politics accompanying the change, not even financial politics. The change is made because it is dictated by the currents of trade. New Jersey's money flows in and out of New York, and it is enabled to do its banking with New York. The transfer suffices to make the New York Federal banking district about twice as large as Chicago and as large as Boston and Philadelphia together. That is the result, not the cause, of the change. The cause of the change was the betrayal of the instructions in the Federal Reserve Bank law that banking relations should be established according to the habits of trade. Instead, they were established with deliberate intent to reduce the financial importance of New York. This is not the case in New York alone. It is the case throughout the country, and the reorganization must proceed along the lines indicated in the New York-New Jersey case.

The number of reserve districts was made so large that there was difficulty in finding the banking capital to sustain them. In some cases there was such an insufficiency of banking accommodation that it was necessary to raise the rates in order to send borrowers where there was a better supply of cash. In other cases the "mercantile, industrial, and financial relations" of the tributary territory were violated as seriously in principle as in the cases now remedied. At the same time with the correction of the boundaries of the New York district there are similar changes in the Richmond, Kansas City, and Cleveland districts. Decision was reserved in the cases of the Baltimore and Pittsburgh districts, and petitions from Wyoming and Nebraska were denied.

The subject is not altogether disposed of, and the change is likely to proceed further in two directions. Reorganization along banking and mercantile lines will still further weaken districts already weak, and they perhaps may disappear, thus lessening the number of reserve districts. As the Federal Reserve banks strengthen they are likely to establish branches. Thus the number of regional banks will be smaller and the localities with an ambition for individual representation in the Federal system will be gratified. The tendency is in the direction of strengthening the strong, with assurance that the strength shall be for service, not for oppression. The other idea, represented in the errors now corrected, was that strength was an evil, and that it was necessary to cripple it. That is the explanation of the creation of Federal districts which are scarcely able to sustain themselves, and the intentional degradation of New York. The attempt was so futile that New York is stronger after the attack, perhaps partially because of the attack.

When the nation's banking resources were gerrymandered there was talk only of New York's money trust oppressing the nation. Today the talk is of New York's banks and bankers serving the world instead of the nation. If that is accomplished in any degree it will not be the result of a conspiracy in restraint of trade, but the result of work done by dollars and brains. The time has come when the world cannot say that it is impossible for the world's central banks to deal with the United States because it has no representative bank. The time is past when it could be said that it was impossible for the United States to have a central bank because it had no competent bankers. The proof that it has them is in the enactment of the Federal law, and still more in the manner of its administration.

REMAKING THE COMMONWEALTH.

Grandiose measures for creating new departments and reorganizing the State Government, reported from the Constitutional Convention at Albany, are signs that the session is young. Delegate E. N. SMITH of Jefferson presents a short-ballot plan which retains the Controller and Attorney General as elective officials—why, Mr. SMITH cannot tell according to the short-ballot principle. Of course, partisan advantage would accrue in exempting from responsibility to the Governor the two men who have most power over the State's contracts and in enforcing its laws. The Smith plan will probably be swept off the boards, together with ex-Senator BRACKETT's amendment lengthening the ballot with the added offices of Superintendent of Banks, Insurance, and Prisons.

Numerous other amendments to overhaul the powers of the Executive and the Legislature, providing biennial sessions, lengthening terms, increasing salaries, establishing new sets of bureaus and divisions, granting woman suffrage, and effecting many particular reforms can be justified only by the belief that this convention has a great mandate of the people. Only 310,000 voters took part in the election authorizing the convention, and of them almost one-half voted against it. The great majority of the voters would be content if the convention did nothing, or did some one thing safely and well.

THE STATE'S FINANCES.

The announcement that the State must borrow several millions for current expenses should not be mistaken for a justification of the direct tax. It is said that the money must be borrowed because of Governor GLYNN's veto of the direct tax last year. On the contrary, it is proof that last year's direct tax was unnecessary. The shortage is not in the amount which the direct tax would have supplied, but in the estimate of the proceeds of taxes, for reasons not within anybody's thought at the time of Governor GLYNN's veto. If the direct tax had been levied last year there is little doubt it would have been spent. The closing of the Stock Exchange and the conditions which that implies are responsible for the shortage which the State is about to make good by borrowing, not the veto of Governor GLYNN.

The manner in which the shortage is made good is the manner in which the canal crisis ought to have been met, and was not met through sheer obstinacy. The section of the finance law under which this temporary borrowing is authorized was called to the attention of the Executive and the lawmakers, and they declined to act upon it. They were wrong because the State cannot borrow so cheaply on its bonds as it can borrow at a bank for short-time accommodations. They were wrong because a shortage of $5,000,000 cannot justify a direct tax of $19,000,000. They were wrong because they ordered income to be spent on capital account contrary to the order of the people who must pay the taxes to make up the sums they ordered borrowed. They were wrong because the direct tax was ordered for purposes which cannot bear the light of day. That was proved by the manner in which the expenses were ordered. It promises to be further proved by the hearings ordered by the Governor.

Governor WHITMAN now has an opportunity to restore himself to the esteem of his townsmen and his constituents throughout the State by defeating his own proposals. It will be easy and simple for him to say that he does not recognize the things done as the things which he proposed, or even that he has changed his mind. The people who will escape the taxes will not lay it up against him.

Opponents of the Thompson bill regulating "jitney" buses in this State and requiring that drivers of motor cycles take out licenses for identification will try today to persuade the Governor to veto it. Their task will be difficult. Certainly they will fail to show that motor cycles do not cause many and grave accidents, or that there is any official means of identifying their drivers. The Chief of Police of Buffalo has published statistics showing that the "jitneys" are a menace when unregulated.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Freedom of Speech is Precious.

One part of the London press is much excited because another part is severely criticising the policies and proceedings of the high officials who constitute what over there they call "the Government." Such attacks, at such a time as this, are bitterly denounced as aiding and comforting "the enemy" in a way that verges close to, if not into, treason, and the editors whom it offends are clamoring for an extension of the military censorship that would put England in the category with countries where—well, where newspapers are subjected to a much stricter and sterner control than has been exercised over them in England for more than a few centuries.

If that were done, the protesting journalists would probably, almost unquestionably, soon find themselves indignant victims of the very restrictions they now want imposed upon their neighbors, for they, too, have the critical faculty highly developed by long practice, and they could not long forego its exercise.

It is a notable fact that the denunciations now making are of the criticism, as such, rather than of its injustice, and there is implicit, though not explicit, maintenance of the contention that even if the Government has made mistakes, and no matter how harmful they may have been, no public mention should be made of them in a time of national peril. There is, of course, something in that view or theory, and it is both wise and patriotic to refrain from unnecessary fault-finding with those presumably carrying their huge responsibilities to the best of their ability. And this is especially commendable in speakers and writers who can hardly be as well or as fully informed as are the officials whom they judge. But judicious self-restraint is one thing, and a complete silencing of criticism by governmental power is quite another.

The latter condition exists, or seems to exist, in Germany, but none is readier than the London editor of whatever party to point out the dangers incurred by a people whose ruling caste can and does create an apparent unanimity of public opinion by penalizing all expressions of it not laudatory of or acquiescent to the Government's views and acts. It is strange that Englishmen, after complaining as loudly as most of them have of their censorship as it is, should now be demanding its extension on German lines.

Where Tips Land at Last.

Seldom if ever before has any employer admitted as frankly as did Mr. LINCOLN of the Pullman Car Company that where employés depend upon tips, as thousands of that corporation's employés do, it is really the public that pays their wages. Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Industrial Relations Commission, insisted upon putting it in that light, and Mr. LINCOLN agreed that "as a mathematical proposition it amounts to that." The wonder is, not that he manifested his realization of the somewhat humiliating element in the situation he reluctantly described, but that the many other indirect beneficiaries of the tipping system do not have and confess to the same feelings.

Between the man who takes tips and the man who will not take them there always has yawned and always must yawn an unbridged and unbridgeable social abyss. On the one hand is asserted superiority and on the other confessed inferiority, and the difference cannot be ignored or forgotten, even where the doctrine of equality is most vehemently preached and most sincerely practiced. Work—any work—honestly done for an agreed wage is honorable, but the tip is almost invariably the product of extortion or of servility, and whoever receives it, either directly or indirectly, is, to say the very least of him, put on the defensive and confronted by an extremely hard job.

The steamship steward, the hotel and restaurant waiter, the barbers—all the great and seemingly increasing army of tip hunters—are only collectors for folk who retain their self-respect and the respect of others by means of a laboriously maintained forgetfulness of the situation as it is. Yet the abolition of tipping seems to be impossible—that it is even really desirable is not quite sure. Some men will give tips just as some men will take them, and there is apparently no help for it. While those two classes exist, practically everybody else is compelled either to tip or to be tipped and to suffer the inevitable demoralization that follows in both cases.

A Controversy Seemingly Unnecessary.

If the nurses with hospital training are not seeking to monopolize the profits of their ancient name and profession, and if the nurses less well equipped have no desire to pass for what they are not—and these are the assertions that come from the two camps—what is there for them to quarrel about, and why do they not get together in demanding the passage of a law that will protect all their rights and the public safety at the same time?

The problem is apparently one easy to solve. It is a fact that nurses of unlike teaching and experience are of different competence and different worth. That fact could be recognized by dividing them into their several grades and allotting to each the right, and imposing on each the obligation, to put before or after their titles, when seeking employment, designations analogous to the "degrees" that separate other professional persons into higher and lower classes.

Nobody denies that the hospital is the best school for nurses or would withhold from its graduates the distinction and the recompense earned by the hardest kind of work. But there are other sources of instruction which has its merit and its uses, and the possessors of it are also deserving of just recognition and commensurate reward. They do not know everything, and are not for all "cases," but in their humbler way they can render efficient service and do something to prevent illness from being the grave disaster it so often is to people of limited resources.

Nothing would be begrudged to the regularly trained nurses except the exclusive use of the word "nurse." Reasonable and proper qualifications of the name might well be established, and when nothing more is demanded the chances are that it will be readily granted.

ART NOTES.

Allied Artists' Exhibition Opens Today—Municipal Art on View.

The exhibition of the Allied Artists of America opens today at the Fine Arts Building. The paintings are hung in panels and these panels are separated by strips of khaki-colored cloth. That is the only warlike suggestion in the room. The exhibits have been collected in the spirit of peace and their message is discreet and every whit as interesting as that which you read in the book of the Academy. The entrance of drawings, etchings, and that curious form of art known as the thumb-box sketch is an innovation or revival much to be commended. A fuller notice will be given to the exhibition later, but the public should be assured promptly, if it needs such assurance, that no futurists or cubists or modernists have broken down the American front on Fifty-seventh Street. The exhibition of the Allied Artists is one to be visited with a quiet mind and an appreciation of pleasant culture.

Civic Art Exhibition.

In the galleries of the National Arts Club the walls are covered with maps, photographs, and plans constituting the Civic Art Exhibition of the Municipal Art Society of New York. The chief purpose of the exhibition is to show what has been accomplished by the City of New York in recent years along artistic lines in the solution of the many problems connected with its municipal life. The revised seal and the new city flag are on view, and a little archaeological exhibit shows objects gathered from the battlegrounds of the Revolution and photographs of historic houses still standing, or until recently standing, in the older parts of the city. Some of these are so charming that it is difficult to turn from their eloquent age to the appalling newness of the plans not yet carried out for making over that which was badly made or that which has outgrown its usefulness.

Nevertheless the crux of the exhibition is the work of the Commission on City Plan. In order to realize its importance it is necessary to keep in mind its relation to the whole artistic life of the nation. The architectural embellishment of a city is widely recognized as a task for artists, but the architecture of the city itself has too long been left to chance and the politician. We now are beginning to see that upon the fundamental rightness of this architecture depend not only the health and comfort of the public, but its pleasure in its surroundings and its municipal pride.

Therefore the careful maps showing such preliminary data as the distribution of population, time zones, &c., call for the attention of every one interested in the development of the city. Unfortunately they also demand a grasp of the problems involved not to be expected from the casual visitor. The latter will get more in the way of conviction from such an exhibit as that most intelligently prepared by the firm of architects, McKenzie, Voorhees & Gmelin, which shows their proposed changes in Brooklyn between the Borough Hall and the bridge. The plan emphasizes four points, the submerging of the elevated roads, the removal of the bridge station, the widening of Washington Street, and the provision of sites for future municipal buildings. A model is erected from the point of view of a person advancing toward the City Hall from the bridge, and the ample and interesting arrangement of the space at once enlists the eye.

THE TIMES WAR HISTORY.

It Will Become Invaluable, Chancellor Allison Thinks.

Chancery Court Chambers.
Nashville, Tenn., May 3, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have received and read most of Volume 1 of THE NEW YORK TIMES Current History of the European War, December, 1914, to March, 1915.

The volume, without more, ought to be read throughout Europe and America, for it contains much matter of history, written up by those who have witnessed the facts and events about which they write, or who have actual personal knowledge of them, and by some who were part of the affairs, occurrences, &c., set down.

I presume it will be, as it ought to be, translated into the tongues of all of the participants in the most cruel, savage, and stupendous war of all history.

The putting together of the facts of history in their chronological order and in their proper relations to and bearings at once makes the volume attractive to the reader and enables him to take a mental grasp upon the facts, greatly aiding him to retain them in his mind.

Of course, our "war between the States" (as Alexander H. Stephens entitles it in his two volumes) was a small affair as compared with the war now raging in Europe; but if such a volume as you have given to mankind concerning the European war had been made up as to the "war between the States" it would today be simply invaluable.

P. C. and Panama.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It was interesting to read in yesterday's issue of your paper the notice from Washington that the United States has another new flag, known as the Panama Canal flag, consisting of a blue square bearing the letters P. C. in white. It looks as if originality had run out in Washington when they have adopted the church flag of the old Scotch Covenanters, which was a blue flag with white letters standing for "Preach Christ."

THE DUNKIRK TARGET.

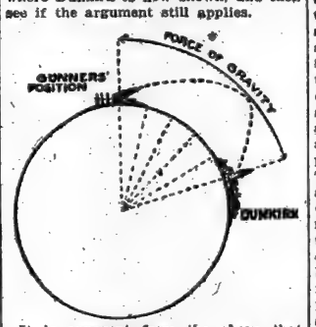
New York, May 2, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of May 1 I noticed the diagram showing the position of the German gunner which was referred to in the note as being 300 feet below that of his target, Dunkirk, 22 miles distant, due to the curvature of the earth's surface. From your diagram some readers might easily get that impression, but we know it to be untrue when considering the fact that all points on the earth's surface are, roughly speaking, equidistant from its centre, and that the force of gravity tending to draw all solid bodies toward this centre, acts with equal strength from all points on its surface.

If the assumption that a shell fired by the German gun toward Dunkirk would have to overcome a difference in elevation of 300 feet or more due to this curvature were true, it would mean that the centre of gravity were elsewhere than at the earth's centre, and that soldiers stationed in the vicinity of the gun would be unable to stand due to this impossible direction of gravity. Should these same soldiers be able to walk toward Dunkirk they would find themselves better able to stand as they approached that city, according to the argument.

I would suggest that the artist who made this diagram arrange it in such a way that Dunkirk come nearer the right-hand border and the gunners' position where Dunkirk is now shewn, and then see if the argument still applies.



It is apparent from the above that Dunkirk can be lower in relation to the gunners' position as far as the diagram is concerned, but the force of gravity remains the same.

Chautauqua Trains No Nurses.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will you let me bring to your attention and the attention of Lucy P. Scott an error in her communication published by you Sunday, April 11? The letter in question, aiming to set forth the objections to unregulated and unstandardized practice of nursing and the abuses inherent in undertaking to make "nurses" by correspondence, says, "one of the largest of these schools is that of Chautauqua," &c.

Chautauqua offers no course in nursing by correspondence or otherwise. At Jamestown, N. Y., twenty miles from Chautauqua, is a correspondence school for nurses, which, although in no way connected with Chautauqua Institution, does style itself "The Chautauqua School for Nursing." Such trafficking with the name to which the institution alone has given value in the educational world by forty years of legitimate and successful effort is unwelcome to the institution. It is unwelcome precisely because the confusion that it is designed to create in the public mind not only lends false color of authority to the concerns profiting by it, but also makes Chautauqua liable to undeserved reproach for activities over which the institution has no control. Effective denial of responsibility is generally impossible, but an open arraignment like that to which you have just given space, we think, justifies our request that you print this disavowal.

The Common Sense Nurse.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I know from experience with fourteen years of nursing, that the "public does not need protection by law" as much as the State registered nurse thinks she does. I am sorry the nurses are trying to legislate so much. I fear we lose the respect of the public. Nursing ought not to become political.

I am a State registered nurse. I don't see as it has helped me any. I am now Superintendent of a small infirmary. Whenever I have occasion to call for nurses I usually tell the registry to send me a woman with common sense, graduate or undergraduate, and nine times out of ten a practical, satisfactory nurse is sent.

Is Saving Obsolete?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In these days of compulsory insurance, employers' liability, and particularly pensions of the old-age type is it to be assumed that the good old custom of our forefathers of saving up for a rainy day is passing? Is it no longer a sound doctrine to preach saving or is this now behind the times? It would seem from the way clerks and cash girls dress and spend and do not weigh well the value received that the uncertainties of the future were of very little moment to the great majority of our city population. "I cannot save; it takes all I get to live," is upon nearly every one's lips in nearly every walk of life. The small majority who have saved and are saving are scoffed at for being misers, and when one through thrift and sacrifice has amassed something toward unforeseen difficulties the envious eye, if not the hand, of the less cautious neighbor is upon it. I hope this thought will bring forth in the columns of THE TIMES some expressions of opinion to enlighten those old-fashioned ones who, like me, believe in saving.

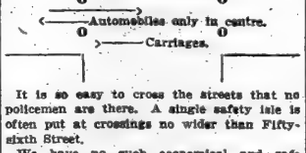
Elevated Sidewalks.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On the Champs Elysee, but little wider than Broadway at Fifty-seventh Street, are at every crossing two safety isles. The traffic runs thus:



It is so easy to cross the streets that no policemen are there. A single safety isle is often put at crossings no wider than Fifty-sixth Street.

We have no such economical and safe devices. But if tall buildings continue, a second-story sidewalk must come. The sooner the better. We see mention of killed and wounded in streets. How vast a number are almost run over, and that's no joke.

Mr. Bonheur to Dr. Dernburg.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I see that Dr. Dernburg denied the story told in THE TIMES of May 3. The story appeared in the Paris Temps at least five or six weeks ago, and appeared there before I ever heard of it. I did not say that Colonel Roosevelt told me the story. I said that I heard it in his presence.

AS WAR REACTS UPON THIS COUNTRY.

The Possibilities of Disappointment in a Prosperity Built Upon the Misfortunes of Our Best Customers.

By VICTOR MORAWETZ.

New York, May 5, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is plain that up to the present time the war in Europe has not increased material prosperity in the United States. This is shewn by the widespread unemployment of labor, by the large falling off in the production of basic raw materials of industry, such as iron, steel, coal, and lumber, and by the prevailing general depression of business.

Are these conditions likely to continue as long as the war lasts? This will depend upon the effect of the war upon the aggregate production of wealth in the United States, for the material prosperity of the country at large depends upon the aggregate amount of wealth that is produced. An increase of the aggregate production of wealth will increase our prosperity, but a lessening of the aggregate production will diminish our prosperity, even though some kinds of production should be increased and some industries should thrive.

A large foreign trade balance in favor of the United States will not of itself bring us prosperity. In the future, as at the present time, a large trade balance may be more than set off by a lessening of production of forms of wealth that do not enter into foreign trade. In this connection it should not be overlooked that an increase of the prices of foodstuffs and other products does not represent a gain to the people of the United States, except as to the small portion of these foodstuffs and other products that can be exported. Most of the foodstuffs and other things produced by us are required for consumption at home, and any increase of their prices must be paid by the people of the United States. Thus, if 20 per cent. of our wheat crop should be exported, a 50 per cent. increase of the price of wheat would represent a gain to the United States of the increased price of only the 20 per cent. of the crop. The profit received by our farmers from the sale of four-fifths of their crop at the increased price would have to be paid by consumers in the United States, and principally by the laboring classes.

The war has not diminished our natural resources and has not destroyed any of our industrial plants, railways and other instruments of production and distribution; nor has it diminished appreciably the volume of labor available in the United States. If capital and labor could promptly be shifted to new forms of production, and if production could promptly be readjusted to existing conditions, the continuance of the war might not impair our prosperity, but, on the contrary, it might increase production and prosperity by furnishing us with foreign markets heretofore supplied by the warring nations. However, labor cannot easily be shifted from one industry to another and, as a rule, invested capital cannot be used for any purpose other than that for which it was originally designed. Thus, a coal miner or an ironworker cannot easily become a farmer, and a cotton mill or a lumber mill cannot be used for the production of shrapnel or of dyestuffs. A substantial readjustment of industry necessarily is a slow process and cannot be brought about without much suffering among laborers and much loss of capital.

Moreover, if production in the United States were readjusted to the existing conditions, which are only temporary, another adjustment, with all its attending unemployment and losses, would become necessary upon the re-establishment of normal conditions at the close of the war. Even if the United States should establish new manufacturing plants to supply the foreign demand for products which, but for the war, would be supplied by Germany or England, many of these plants would have to be abandoned at the end of the war when Germany and England again can resume their foreign trade. If the United States should build or buy ships and establish a merchant marine to take the place of the German ships which now are tied up and the English ships which have been withdrawn from trade for use as army transports, the ships built or bought by the United States probably could not be operated after the war except at a heavy loss, and all those employed in their operation would then have to find other means of earning a living.

Production in modern times is dependent upon an extremely complicated and delicately adjusted system of international trade and finance. The agricultural, industrial, and distributing industries of all nations have become closely interrelated and have become parts of one great mechanism of almost inconceivable complexity. Part of this complicated mechanism cannot be stopped without throwing the whole of it out of gear, or without causing a disarrangement of industry throughout the world. The disarrangement of international trade and finance must continue as long as the war lasts, and is bound to cause great economic losses not only to the nations at war but also to the United States and other neutral nations. Years would be required to adjust international trade and finance to fit the new conditions caused by the war, and another readjustment would be required when normal conditions are restored upon the return of peace.

Up to the present time the large balance of trade in favor of the United States has been paid by Europe, partly by liquidating floating debt due from the United States at the beginning of the war, partly by borrowing in the United States and partly by selling in the United States American securities held in Europe. The floating debt of the United States has now been satisfied, and it is improbable that the United States will extend much additional credit to the nations at war. Although, no doubt, European countries will obtain some further credits in the United States, the amount of the credits which they can obtain probably will be wholly inadequate to satisfy a trade balance in favor of the United States at the current rate, if this should continue much longer. None of the countries of Europe can afford to send any considerable amount of gold to the United States, as the gold held by their banks is necessary to support the artificial credit structure now existing in these countries. The currency of some of these countries already is practically irredeemable paper at a discount, and the entire credit structure in every country, except the United States, is in a shaky condition. The export by any European country of a large amount of gold would be likely to bring on a general financial crash. Europe is not in a position to increase her exports of anything, except securities and existing works of art. It seems to follow that if the war continues the time must soon come when Europe either must diminish her purchases in the United States, or must sell back to the United States a much larger amount of American securities.

It is not likely that Europe can diminish purchases in the United States; but if these purchases should be diminished production in the United States of war materials and other things exported would fall off, and the profits of those engaged in supplying these things would shrink. If, however, Europe should continue her large purchases in the United States and should increase the sale of American securities for that purpose, this would tend to increase the difficulty of raising capital in the United States for the development of new enterprises and for the enlargement of the facilities of our railroad companies and industrial concerns. It is true that at the present time money is easy in the United States, and that the balance of trade in our favor can be used to make payment for the American securities exported by Europe. But the use of our balance of trade to pay for securities sold by Europe would involve the absorption of capital needed in the United States for the further development of the country. Moreover, securities shipped to the United States for sale must be sold in the market to persons desiring them for investment and, if the supply of these securities should be largely increased, the investment demand probably would not absorb them without a fall in security values.

For the above reasons it seems unlikely that there will be a general revival of enterprise or expansion of business in the United States, or a healthy and lasting increase of security values during the continuance of the war.

The question remains, what will happen when the war ends? The nations of Europe then will endeavor as speedily as possible to readjust their disordered finances, to repair the ravages of the war, and to resume agricultural and industrial production at a normal scale. They will stop purchasing war materials and, as soon as they can raise new crops, they will diminish their purchases of foodstuffs. Probably there will be an immediate demand for agricultural machinery and for reconstruction material which Europe cannot promptly supply, and the demand for cotton and other raw materials will increase as fast as the manufacturing industries can increase their output. Increased European production of manufactured articles, however, will result in greater competition with similar articles produced in the United States for export or for domestic consumption. Some industries in the United States will gain while others will lose, but, as nearly always happens in case of a readjustment of industry, diminished profits, depreciation of invested capital, and unemployment of labor in some industries are likely to result, at least temporarily, in losses greater than the gains in other industries.

After our civil war Europe was in a position to make large advances to the United States, and our wealth was increased enormously through the construction of railways and other permanent works, and the rapid increase of the productiveness and value of our lands and other natural resources. Similar conditions are not likely to follow the present war. European countries will not be in a position to extend their credits. Their natural resources have already been developed, and there is no reason for anticipating that foreign or American capital will be directed to a greater extent than immediately before the war to the construction of new railways, or to the expansion of existing lines, or to the development of other new enterprises in the United States. It is possible that the expansion of credits permitted by our new banking and currency legislation and the large expansion of currency and of credits in Europe may result in rising prices and to consequent paper profits and apparent prosperity; but prosperity due to such a cause would be only temporary and inevitably would be followed by a reaction. Real profits and lasting prosperity must be based upon the creation of real and tangible wealth.

There can be no substantial increase of the aggregate production of wealth and no lasting increase of prosperity in the United States until after the return of relatively stable conditions in production and trade so that relatively stable employment can be provided for the available labor of the country. Even if international trade were a more important factor than it is in the creation of wealth and prosperity throughout the United States, no real and lasting increase of our wealth and prosperity can result, either during the war or afterward, from the misfortunes and impoverishment of our best customers.

MR. MULLER'S VISIT.

Denial That Its Purport Is Hostile to the United States.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I was painfully surprised to read in your edition of last Friday a letter purported to be from a retired journalist, in which is clearly revealed a misguided though perhaps bona fide intention of warning this country against the so-called A B C policy.

The retired journalist uses an almost hysterical phraseology to qualify the visit of Lauro Muller to Argentina, Uruguay, and Chile. Fear of the United States has not prompted this official's visit in South America, as these visits have been a common occurrence in the international life of the continent since 1880, and even before that. Above all the A B C is not and will not be an antagonistic power to the United States of America.

The A B C, it must be understood by [illegible] all Americans, has no policies, purposes; in one word it does not exist. Each of the nations composing the so-called group has an individuality of its own, a policy of its own, which are absolutely independent in every respect. The first external manifestation of the so-called A B C was the mediation on the eve of the casus belli with Mexico, and then it was merely an occasional [illegible] which ended the very day upon which its mission was fulfilled.

The only bond in common for these countries is the Pan-American feeling, which, by its nature, is an objective one, since it is the product of a huge community which comprehends all the Americas, North, Central, and South. Therefore, when we consider in the light of Pan-Americanism the pretense that there are other motives in this international courtesy, we find how lacking in reason are those misguiding warnings and how little they help [illegible] the good will among the nations.

The A B C, it must be understood by [illegible], May 1, 1915. E. G.

$2,000 SADDLE HORSE FOR GIFT.

Special to The New York Times.

HOT SPRINGS, Va., May 5.—When Mrs. Melville E. Ingalls, Jr., who lives at the Ritz-Carlton, New York, arrives shortly for the Summer she willl find awaiting as a birthday present a $2,000 saddle horse that her husband, who was here Sunday, bought for her from Walter Clark of Paris, Ky. The horse is Golden King II., son of a famous sire of the same name, owned by the Ashley Farms of Glen Falls, and was tried out by Mr. Ingalls here last Sunday.

The apple blossoms have come out on the many orchards surrounding Hot Springs, making the country unusually attractive for driving. Mr. and Mrs. Arthur J. Cumnock were among those in the saddle today. They rode to Fassifern for luncheon, where Mr. and Mrs. Ernest A. Hammill also drove for luncheon with Miss Eleanor C. Hammill. Mrs. H. J. McBurney rode her horse over, accompanying her husband, who drove with Miss Marion Scott Key. Mrs. George Ellis, who leaves for New York tomorrow night with Mrs. Rawson Wood, rode to the Farm for supper and to spend the night. Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Hardenburg had as their guests at luncheon there today Miss Maud H. Clements, Randolph F. Purdy, Miss Miles Carpenter, and Miss A. F. Brookewell.

Mrs. William Earry Dodge, who has just arrived, played golf this morning. Others out were Miss Christine Biddle, Dr. Alexander Biddle, Miss Margaret Erhart, and C. D. Hine.

The New York arrivals included A. W. Burchard, Leroy Clark, T. W. Sanford, Maurice Coster, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Nichols, Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Terry and Miss Terry, C. H. Wilcox, A. H. Strickler, and J. A. Perry. Others registering were Miss I. M. Humphreys of Washington, Herbert Lloyd and J. R. Williams of Philadelphia; George A. Cragin of Worcester, and G. F. Morrison of Newark.

BOYD—SHEBLE.

Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Boyd of 46 West Seventy-first Stret, announce the engagement of Mrs. Boyd's sister, Miss Dorothy O'Dea to J. Howard Sheble, Jr., of Philadelphia. The wedding will take place in June.

COMMENTS ON PIGNATELLI.

Mrs. Waters, Bride's Mother, Says "I Hardly Know the Prince."

Special to The New York Times.

RED BANK, N. J., May 5.—According to Mrs. George Jason Waters, mother of Miss Ruth Waters, who was married yesterday to Prince Pignatelli in New York City, the couple will leave the Prince's home at Merrick, L. I., tomorrow for Hot Springs, Va., on their honeymoon. Mrs. Waters and her son, J. Behrens Waters, were seen in their automobile on Broad Street today.

Asked what her objections were to the Prince, Mrs. Waters said: "The Prince is 37 years old and a foreigner, and my daughter is just 22. He never said anything to me about wanting to marry my Ruth," she added, "and I hardly know the man."

When George Jason Waters, the bride's father, was asked tonight where his daughter and the Prince were he replied in a rather indifferent tone: "I have no idea where they are."

DWIGHT C. HARRIS TO WED.

The Bride of Gerald G. Freeman—Wedding Breakfast at the Ritz.

The marriage of Gerald Gerzion Freeman of London, England, and Miss Sara Clare Posner, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Posner of 545 West 111th Street, took place yesterday at the residence of the Rev. Isaac Moses. The bride wore a blue cloth traveling gown with a blue hat, and carried lilies of the valley and daisies.

Her attendants were her two sisters. Mrs. Norman Levinson was the matron of honor, in blue taffeta and chiffon, and Miss Edith Posner, in blue cloth and chiffon, was the maid of honor. Mr. Freeman's brother-in-law, Isidore Smullyan, was his best man. A wedding breawfast for the bridal party and the immediate family took place at the Ritz-Carlton.

Mr. and Mrs. Freeman are booked to sail Saturday on the Espagne for France, and will return later to make their home in New York.

B. N. Duke Leases Dugmore Estate.

Benjamin N. Duke has leased for the Summer the fine estate owned by Mrs. Lelia Dugmore, formerly Mrs. H. Bramhall Gilbert, at Great Neck. It occupies one of the choicest locations on the north Long Island shore. The property, a short time ago, was reported as having been leased by Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt. The Dukes, it is said, will do a great deal of entertaining. Their son, Angier B. Duke, was married last week in Philadelphia to Miss Cordelia Drexel Biddle, daughter of Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, and after the wedding the engagement was announced of Miss Mary Duke to Anthony Drexel Biddle, Jr. Mrs. Dugmore will receive a rental of $17,000 for the Summir occupancy of her place. Clifford van Schurman acted as the broker in the lease.

Mrs. Roosevelt Leaves Hospital.

Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt was discharged from Roosevelt Hospital yesterday. She was operated on on April 15 and has been convalescing since. Her son, Archie, called for her at the hospital in a motor and they went to Oyster Bay. Mrs. Roosevelt fell from her horse in January and the accident is supposed to have necessitated the operation.

Hood-Robinson Wedding in London.

Announcements have been received in New York by their many friends of the marriage on April 17 in the Church of the Sacred Heart, Caterham, England, of Miss Marie Josephine Robinson, elder daughter of Archibald Robinson of Dublin, to Joseph Hood, Vice President of the British-American Tobacco Company. The bride's father is Justice of the Peace of Dublin.

C. A. Cady, Manufacturerer, Dead.

Christopher A. Cady, 71 years old, a wallpaper manufacturer of Boston, was found dead in his room at the McAlpin yesterday at 1 P. M. by a chambermaid. Coroner Healy and Coroner's Physician Roe said the cause was heart disease. Mr. Cady had breakfast in the hotel restaurant with John C. Lutz and George W. Phelps. To them he complained that he had not been in good health for six weeks, and, after the meal went upstairs to lie down. Mr. Cady's son, who is in business with him at 174 Pearl Street, Boston, came to New York last night.

ASKS SQUARE DEAL FOR THE HUSBANDS

EXTOLS HOMEMAKER'S WORK

Pleads Before Housewives' Municipal League for Better Management of Household.

"Give the American husband a square deal," was the proposal made yesterday morning by Mrs. Thetta Quay Franks, in a lecture before the Housewives' Municipal League. The plea for the rights of husbands pleased Mrs. Franks's audience, which listened with approval as she brought the American housewife sharply to book for her shortcomings. Not only is the American husband being treated unfairly, she asserted, but in many cases he is treated dishonorably by the attractive creature he has chosen to be his helpmeet.

And it was the women of the wealthier classes, those of them who wash their hands of what Mrs. Franks termed their "sacred trust" by giving over the charge of their households to servants, who came in for the severest censure. Mrs. Franks shook her head sadly over the fact that the Mayor of this city had to appoint a committee of men to instruct women in the art of running their households economically and on a business basis.

"That report," emphasized Mrs. Franks, "was a serious arraignment of women. It startles one into a realization of the great numbers of women who are occupying positions of responsibility at the heads of households, and who are not worthy of the trust imposed in them. They are not giving their American husbands a square deal.

Commonplace Duties Neglected.

"Why is it that many women do not seem to realize the importance of the position of housewife, the oldest and the most vitally important profession in the world? It is the old story of the Wise and the Foolish Virgins repeating itself. Human nature has not changed so greatly in 2,000 years. The Foolish Virgins failed to have enough oil. Why? It was such a commonplace. Everybody had it, lamps were always filled with it, and so they did not take upon themselves the personal responsibility of seeing that it was provided. They left that to some one else in the same easy going way in which their sisters, nearly 2,000 years later, leave the daily ordering of their households to servants, and refuse to take the responsibility for what they consider commonplace details.

"The Foolish Virgins were careless, and they paid the penalty. Some one must always pay. The modern type of woman is equally thoughtless and careless, but it is her husband who pays the penalty in unnecessarily high living expenses.

"There is one point of difference between the ancient point of view and that of to-day. The Foolish Virgins said to the Wise Virgins, 'Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out.' But the Wise answered: 'Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you.' To-day the Wise Virgins are saying to the Foolish Ones: 'Have you oil for your lamps? If not, get it now. You can buy perfectly pure oil at the lowest price from So-and-So. Be sure you are getting full measure. Buy it personally, and do it now.'"

Men Are Blamed.

But, however much Mrs. Franks may blame the American housewife for her extravagance and carelessness, she holds that it is the logical result of undervaluing the profession of housekeeping, and for this the men are responsible.

"The cause of women's indifference toward housekeeping," she said, "must be sought far back in the nation's history at the time when education was denied to woman because it might unfit her for the duties of housewife and mother. That attitude on the part of mankind debased to a low level of enforced ignorance what really should be considered one of the most important of functions. Although women have obtained their right to education, there still remains the remembrance that their profession was once considered so menial and unintellectual that a rudimentary education was denied them. Thus the mental attitude of mankind has become reflected in the attitude of women.

"In the past American men have not given American women a square deal in the matter of education, but they have seen the error of their ways and have made amends. In the past American women have not given American men a square deal in the matter of a business management of their homes. Will women be equally frank in acknowledging their mistake and equally generous in trying to make amends to men?"

Mrs. Frank not only asserts that the American household should be run on a strictly business basis; she has actually regulated hers so that it meets that requirement. The large Franks home at Llewellyn Park, with its constant stream of guests, requires six servants for its administration. Not only does Mrs. Franks keep itemized accounts of lump expenditures, such as the servants' wages, but the orders for the day and the menus in both dining rooms are listed according to a definite business system. At the end of the month Mrs. Franks's grocery bills must tally with the order lists in her account book, and every year she balances her books as carefully as any business man. This system she has outlined in a practical book, "Efficiency in the Household." This is the book which called forth warm approbation from Andrew Carnegie, a personal friend of Mrs. Franks.

Husbands Should Trust Wives.

"No man sits in his drawing room and manages his business successfully from that detached position," said Mrs. Franks. "It is just as important for the housewife to be closely in touch with her household staff. It is wise to have a small table in the kitchen or servants' dining room, which is the housewife's desk. The servant will very soon reflect the attitude of the mistress who takes an intelligent interest in the affairs of the household.

"How often have men said to their wives: 'My dear, if I managed my business as you manage your house, we should be bankrupt.' But the fact is the woman is often kept in ignorance of her husband's business plans and methods, just because he has little respect for her business ability. This reticence on the part of husbands is a great mistake. Much of women's extravagance is due to the fact that they think money is easily acquired. If they knew more about their husband's business affairs, they would appreciate the effort of money making, with its load of responsibilities, and they would look upon the spending of it as a sacred trust.

"To be a successful housewife requires all the intelligence that any woman can bring to bear upon the subject. She must have the business ability of a captain of industry, she must have the knowledge of a diplomatist, and she must have the sympathy which is best developed in her own important profession, that of the housewife."

PORCELAINS BRING $10,488.

The first of the antique Chinese porcelains, pottery, carved jades, agates, rugs, and carpets of the collection of Loo & Cie, (Société Chinoise Léyer,) of Paris, was sold at the American Art Galleries yesterday afternoon, bringing returns of $10,488. There was an unusually large gathering of buyers for this season of the year, although many purchases were made through agents. Among pieces bringing the higher prices of the sale, Edward Getz paid $180 for a 17¼-inch famille verte club-shaped vase, the decorations, figures on horseback and women at a tea table in colors, K'ang-hsi, No. 46 on the catalogue. Another famille vert vase, an inch taller, and with two figure panels set in floral borders, No. 47, went to the Long Sang Ti Company for the highest price of the day, $310.

A pair of double gourd-shaped vases with luminous glaze of mottled sang-de-boeuf splashed over a sea-green ground, went to Getz for $180; T. Richmond paid $160 for No. 133, a pair of imperial yellow bottles with the Ch'ien-lung seal; a mirror black beaker, K'ang-hsi period, No. 159, went to Yamanaka & Co. for $155, and Koopman & Co. gave $190 for No. 161, a pair of pale celadon vases, Yung Cheng, enlarged tenpin shape, with the delicacy of clair-de-lune, 16¾ inches high. To R. H. Lorens, Agent, went No. 165, a pair of Ch'ien-lung jardinieres, oval, encircled by an Indian lotus scroll, exterior and interior with a rich bluish purple glaze.

Horace Harding was a purchaser and also James A. Burden, who paid $64 for No. 128, four yellow bowls, falt bottom raised on a deep foot, the imperial dragon and the flaming jewel etched in the paste on the bottom of the interior. Miss Lillian Russell paid from $200 to $300 for a dozen porcelains and a lacquer box. One of the cloisonnes, No. 222, a Buddhistic figure enthroned, went to A. P. Spencer for $112.

The sale will be concluded this afternoon, when the jades and agates, Chinese carpets and rugs will be sold.

A PERSIAN COUPE FOR $375.

Continuing the sale of ancient Chinese and Persian porcelains, potteries, etc., at the Anderson Galleries yesterday afternoon the returns for the day were $4,47, making a total to date of $6,846. J. P. Hawkins paid $122 for No. 187, a Persian narghila of the XVI. century, from the Exposition of Mohammedan masterpieces in Munich, 1910, ivory glaze, painted in blue, red, green and brown; a Persian bowl of the XI. century, excavated at Rhages, design in the centre showing a man on horseback, No. 192, went to W. H. Westcott for $120; L. M. Gorden gave $150 for No. 255, a Persian vase of the XII. century, salmon paste, decorated on the exterior with seven figure medallions, and on the interior with arabesque scrolls.

A royal coupe, Persian of the XI. century, No. 200, brought the highest price of the day, selling on order for $375. This was of ivory paste, with smooth glaze and relief decorations in red, blue and nauve enamels enriched with gold, Pufic inscriptions. It was excavated at Rhages. No. 262, a Persian bottle-shaped vase of the XIII. century, soft paste with a gray glaze and decoration in relief, birds in flight, excavated at Sultanabad, went to the Lotus Magazine for $120; No. 275, a XII. century Persian plaque, star shaped decorations, a wounded stag in relief on a foliated baskground, excavated at Veramine, sold on order, bringing $130. W. H. Westcott paid $122.50 for No. 307, a Rhodian plate, XVI. century, white ground decorated with flowers in colors.

At the third session of the sale, this afternoon, more potteries and porcelains will be sold with jades, snuff bottles, Persian pottery and Chinese lacquers.

SOCIAL NOTES.

Mr. and Mrs. Nathan H. Davis of Overbrook, Philadelphia, announced yesterday at a small luncheon the engagement of their daughter, Miss Mary L. Davis, to James H. Work, Jr., of Lawrence, L. I. Mr. Work is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Henry Work, and belongs to the Rockaway Hunt Club and the Mayflower Descendants.

The Duchess of Manchester and the Duchess de Chaulnes left here yesterday for the White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., to spend the remainder of the month.

Mrs. William Jay, who has been at Aiken, S. C., is now with her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Iselin, at the Hotel Gotham.

Mrs. Julian Day, who is to arrive here SEaturday from Europe on the St. Louis, will be with Mrs. Clarence S. Day of 43 East Sixty-eighth Street, for a short visit before joining her mother, Mrs. Charles B. Curtis, at Litchfield, Conn.

Dancing in the open will be one of the attractions this afternoon at the Garden Gambol to be given at the Biltmore under the auspices of the Mayfair Relief Committee for the benefit of the convalescents and refugees from the war.

Mrs. Newbold Le Ro Edgar gave an informal reception and musicale yesterday afternoon at her town house, 125 East Fortieth Street.

"Watch Your Step" Ends Saturday.

Because her physician has advised Mrs. Vernon Castle to take a rest, "Watch Your Step" will conclude its long run in the New Amsterdam Theatre Saturday night. Once during the engagement the dancer was forced to give up her work for a week, and the strenuousness of dancing at eight performances a week and at Castles in the Air every night has made a rest at this time imperative.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Jeanette Cazeaux, a Parisienne prima donna, will make her debut in the title role of "Mlle. Nitouche" in the Century Lyceum tonight. Mlle. Cazeaux has sung in many of the opera houses of Europe, but her American career has been confined to concert work. She is a daughter of Mme. Marianne, a former star of the Theatre Antoine, and a granddaughter of Mme. Pilot-Christophe, who sang here with Adelina Patti.

The 1914 "Follies" ended their long tour in Milwaukee last night and left immediately for New York, to be here in time for rehearsals for the ball to be given Monday night in conjunction with the "Midnight Frolic." The company will arrive here tomorrow morning.

Admiral Fletcher and the officers of the Atlantic fleet have been invited to attend the opening performance in the New Brighton Theatre a week from Monday night. The day preceding the opening of the Summer season a special performance for the crews will be given.

Earl Derr Biggers's war play, "Inside the Lines," which will end its stay in the Longacre on Saturday night, will be presented with the same cast in the Cort Theatre, Chicago, early next season.

Marjorie Wood has succeeded Ruth Shepley in "It Pays to Advertise," in the Cohan Theatre, and Miss Shepley is taking a brief vacation at Garden City. Yesterday she made a flight in an aeroplane with Aviator Heinrich and she plans to fly again on Saturday.

An opportunity of seeing one of the new plays of Sarah Bernhardt's repertoire, in which she will appear here in the Fall, will be given at the special matinee of the Gamut Club in the Candler Theatre on Monday afternoon. It is Maeterlinck's "The Death of Tintagiles," and this will be its first performance professionally in New York.

MEDICAL COMMENT ON SLINGSBY CASE

How a Noted Anatomist Deceived Himself as to the Identity of a Boy.

PHYSICAL FORMS INHERITED

But Real Resemblance to Parental Characteristics Should Not Be Expected Until Maturity.

"Teddy" Slingsby, the boy whose resemblance to his father recently won for him a fortune in the English courts, and who arrived here last week with his mother, Mrs. Charles R. Slingsby, furnishes to The Lancet of London a subject for critical comment on family resemblances. The editor tells of how a well-known anthropologist and anatomist deceived himself as to the boy's identity.

"Had the 'Slingsby case,'" says the writer, "been tried in less stirring times, it certainly would have attracted a greater share of public attention, particularly from those who are interested in the inheritance of physical characters. Justice Bargrave Deane recognized a close degree of resemblance between the boy defendant and his father, Charles Slingsby, particularly in the case of the lower jaw; Sir George Frampton detected a likeness between the ears of the boy and his mother. On the day on which the learned Judge gave his judgment a well-known anthropologist, an anatomist famous for his accuracy, descended in a lift with two men and a boy, all three of whom stared stolidly at the advertisements on the wall.

"One of the men was short and dark, the other fair and of medium height. The expert at once assigned the little boy as son to the fair man from their close resemblance. As the lift gates swung open the boy took the dark man by the hand and called him 'Dad,' while the fair man went his own separate way. In telling us his experience, he adds:

"'Another case of mis-identification came under my notice on the evening of the same day. An intelligent and experienced lady called on a friend, who took her up to the nursery to see the latest born. The visitor found two nurses and two babies, and exclaimed: "Well, I need not ask which it is; this one is your image." She then selected the wrong child.'

"From such cases one must conclude that general resemblances may prove misleading. But it is otherwise with particular features, such as the Hapsburg lip. Medical men are well aware of such features; a nose, an eye, or an ear may have such a pronounced shape that a family identification may be made with certainty. Individuals with pronounced features are in the minority. There is no question that such features may be and are inherited. In many instances the characteristic form is not apparent in the young; it becomes fully developed after adolescence, and this is especially true in the case of the nose, and is also the case with the lower jaw.

"The boy defendant is 4 years of age; in the next sixteen years his jaw will be remodeled over and over again to make room for the permanent molar teeth, the teeth which will replace his milk set, and to fit the growth of the upper jaw; it would be at maturity we should expect a real, not an apparent, resemblance of the paternal form of jaw to appear.

"The ear offers a more certain means of identification of likeness, but very few men have studied this complex structure so closely as to be in a position to offer an expert opinion as to degree of likeness. In the photographs which have been published of the parties in the Slingsby case an expert has little difficulty in recognizing what was apparently regarded as a striking feature of the 'Slingsby ear.' The resemblance lies in the degree to which the hinder border of the ear is folded over so as to form a welt.

"It is well known that the folding of the ear margin is a result of retrogression; the more the border is folded over the greater is the degree of developmental retrogression. There is no folding of the border of the ear in the more primitive apes; in some of the higher apes, especially in the orang, there is a high degree of infolding, for the ear of the orang is more retrograde than that of most human races. A considerable degree of infolding of the ear is so common that an anthropologist would give it only a slight value in working out resemblances.

"Sir George Frampton's method of observation we do not know, but we must admit that sculptors have certainly a right to express an opinion. It was Thomas Woolner who drew Darwin's attention to the presence of a nodule on the welt of the human ear which the great evolutionist recognized as a remnant of the ancient pointed tip. That all parties concerned in the Slingsby case should show a trace of the ancient tip is not a matter for surprise; the ear is exceptional which shows no sign of this ancient mark."

RABBI SCHINDLER DEAD.

Teacher and Writer Who Introduced the So-called Reformed Judaism.

BOSTON, May 5.—Solomon Schindler, Rabbi-emeritus of Temple Israel, this city, and one of the best known teachers and preachers in New England, died suddenly today, aged 73 years. He introduced the so-called Reformed Judaism in this section. He was a native of Silesia, but had lived in the United States for nearly forty-five years.

Rabbi Schindler was graduated from Breslau University in 1862, afterward taking a course at the Teachers' Normal School in Buren, Germany. He came to this country in 1871 and became minister of the Congregation Adath Emuno in Hoboken, N. J., and in 1874 was called to Boston and became minister of the Congregation Adath Israel from which he resigned in 1894, becoming superintendent of the Federation of Jewish Charities of Boston in 1895. From 1899 until 1909 he was superintendent of the Leopold Morse Home, and then retired.

He wrote a number of books, among which were "Messianic Expectations and Modern Judaism," "Dissolving Views of the History of Judaism," and "Young West, a Sequel to Ballamy's Looking Backward." His three sons and a daughter survive him.

WESTINGHOUSE CO. TO REFUND BONDS

Purpose the Conversion of $19,476,000 Into Stock or Convertible 5s.

CHANGE INDENTURE CLAUSE

Does Not Require Additional Capital, Directors' Statement Says—Extensive Buying Follows.

Directors of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company elected at a special meeting yesterday to alter the prevailing provisions for the conversion of convertible bonds into stock in a manner distinctly advantageous to holders of the bonds. The conversion price of 200 will, under the plan, be reduced to par for the rest of the year and thereafter will be 110. At the present time the owner of a $1,000 convertible 5 per cent. bond can get only $500 in stock in exchange. With the new plan in force $1,000 bonds will be equal to $1,000 in stock until Dec. 31, 1915.

Bondholders will be asked to consent to a change in the trust indenture under which the bonds were issued in return for the more favorable terms of conversion proposed. The clause in the indenture reads:

"The Electric Company will not issue additional stock entitled to preference or priority over its 'assenting stock,' nor distribute any capital stock by way of stock dividends nor issue any capital stock at a price more than 10 per cent. below the market price of the stock of the same class at the time the new stock is offered for subscription or sale."

As an incident to the plan, in case it becomes operative, either common stock of the company to the amount required for conversion under the plan or new bonds convertible into common stock at the reduced price will be offered to shareholders for pro rata subscription at 105. To the extent that stock or bonds are sold upon this basis the proceeds will be used to retire the present bonds at the redemption price. There are $19,476,000 5 per cent. convertibles outstanding.

The plan provides that new bonds may be exchanged for the old at par. Also, bonds presented for payment in cash will be paid off at 105, while the exchange may be made part for cash and part for new bonds. It was reported in the financial district that the company would shortly put out an issue of new convertible 5s, instead of selling stock.

Kuhn, Loeb & Co. will act as managers when the indicated new financing takes place and will decide what form it shall take. The Guaranty Trust Company has been designated as depositary for bonds in case an exchange for new securities is decided upon.

"The company will not require additional capital," said a statement by the Directors yesterday, "for its present volume of business or for any increase expected in the near future. It has made adequate provision without borrowing for the execution of the large orders recently received from foreign Governments. On the other hand, in case of the radical increase of business which may come with good times, the company would be handicapped in securing additional capital by the restriction cited in the trust indenture."

The convertible bonds were strong on the Stock Exchange after rumors went around of the proposed change of the conversion privilege. From 99¼ they sold up to 104 under extensive buying.

THE TREASURY STATEMENT.

Special to The New York Times.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Further Sharp Decline—Evidences of Investment Demand—War News Influence.

Three weeks ago the volume of trading in stocks for the year to date outran the total for the corresponding period last year. That was due to speculation. Yesterday the volume of bond sales on the Stock Exchange since the beginning of the year passed the total for the corresponding period a year ago. That very largely was the result of investment. It is easy to pick out in the Stock Exchange list of active bonds issues which are highly speculative, but, taking it all in all, and particularly considering it in the light of dealings in bonds off the Stock Exchange this overtopping of last year's transactions reflects the genuinely good demand which exists for investment issues.

This reminder of the existence of a broad investment demand came at an opportune time yesterday, for it fell in with a second severe break in stocks which, taken in conjunction with the decline two days earlier, was accepted as indicating that the market had definitely passed in to the second phase of a bull market, a period of liquidation of over-extended accounts built up during the prevalence of optimism which, though having solid foundation, allowed itself somewhat too free expression in the stock market. The day brought a specific indication of the ease with which high-grade issues are being taken in the fact that the underwriting of the Pennsylvania issue was over-subscribed yesterday in keeping with the expectations of the financial community formed even before it had learned of the exact terms on which this Pennsylvania bond would be floated.

Yesterday's reaction, which gained rapid headway in the late hours of the session carried the average price of fifty active issues 3⅞ points under the high price of the year, which was reached on April 30. The movement, which may be said to have started on March 19, and which reached its apex at the end of April, carried the general level of the market up over 12 points. It is necessary to co-relate the reaction of the last few days to that forward movement if one would form a correct judgment of how far the news has been responsible for the break in prices and how far that was the result merely of an over-extended forward movement. The "bad" news of yesterday was the war news. It is probable that in this category more influence was exerted by the threatened breach between Japan and China and the further news of German successes on both the eastern and western battle fronts than by any apprehension which was felt over the outcome of the Gulflight incident, although the gravity of the situation to which that incident has given rise remains to be determined. This was news enough to cause a renewal of the decline. Indeed, in the position in which the market found itself even less important developments, which the market might regard as unfavorable, would have sufficed to turn prices downward.

Just as the stock market ran ahead of the improvement which has been under way in business so now in going backward it is moving contrary to the course which trade at large is still following. The statistics of iron production for the month of April, which came to hand yesterday, reflected the further expansion in that basic industry last month, and there are indications that the improvement which these figures reflected is continuing. Steel trade advices suggest that the earnings of the Steel Corporation in April were better than those of March and that at the current rate the May earnings will be larger than those for last month, though that, of course, is subject to developments of a month which is still young. Profits of perhaps $3 a ton over those obtained in December and January is of much consequence to the steel trade, as it is also of consequence to the business situation as a whole, at least as an indication of the course of underlying influences.

If the stock market by outrunning its due relation to the progress of business exposed itself to the reaction which is now being seen, it is also true that, other things being equal, less liquidation is required to right the market position on this occasion than after most large forward movements in the past. This for the reason that when the recent rise started the market was in an unusually liquidated position. That fact was one of the things which made possible the rapid rise, and it is one of the elements which should now stand the market in good stead.

MORRIS & ESSEX BOND SALE

Lackawanna Indorsed Securities to be Offered to the Public.

The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western yesterday sold to Kean, Taylor & Co. $2,250,000 Morris & Essex first refunding mortgage 3½ per cent. gold bonds, due in the year 2000. They will be offered to the public in a few days.

These bonds are a part of a $35,000,000 issue authorized in 1900. There are nearly $25,000,000 outstanding, and the Lackawanna, after disposing of $2,250,000 of the bonds, still retains a considerable block in its treasury.

By the terms of the indenture the proceeds are to be used for the retirement of underlying bonds, and to reimburse the Lackawanna for expenditures on the Chester Railroad, a leased line of the Lackawanna system. The bonds are guaranteed, by indorsement, by the Lackawanna.

A large number of freight cars, standing idle on the Pennsylvania's tracks and in shops, were called into use in April. Nevertheless, the system could have handled much more traffic than it had, as is evidenced by the fact that on April 30, there were 63,438 shop and good order cars stored away. This was a decrease for the month of 14,807. The better proportionate decrease in idle cars was shown on the lines east of Pittsburgh, which is probably accounted for by the fact that anthracite coal moves much more freely after the first of April when consumers are taking advantage of the year's lowest price. On the lines east there was a total of 27,327 idle cars at the end of the month, a decrease of 8,217; on the lines west 36,111, a decrease of 6,590.

N. Y. Central Debentures.

The new 6 per cent. convertible bonds recently sold by the New York Central through a J. P. Morgan & Co. syndicate were active and weaker yesterday in sympathy with the movement in New York Central. The day's sales totaled $704,000 at prices ranging from 103⅝ down to 102⅞. The "when issued" bonds were stricken from the list yesterday, and today the subscription receipts, first paid and full paid, will take their place. Bond houses were interested in the decline that came just before the close, in view of the fact that $5,000,000 of the $100,000,000 issue left with the syndicate have been taken up by one of the big distributing houses which will presumably place them with investors at the prevailing market price.

Frisco Reorganization.

A reorganization plan of the St. Louis & San Francisco, according to the latest reports from conference headquarters, may be expected in about three weeks. It is always three weeks where the Frisco plan is concerned. Three months ago the plan was promised within three weeks, and at the expiration of every three weeks since there have been new delays. The situation is so complex, the conference committeemen say, that rapid progress can not be expected. There are so many interests to preserve that it takes weeks for each new suggestion to go the rounds from coast to coast.

At least two fundamental plans of the reorganization plan seem to be agreed upon. There will be an assessment of $15 a share on the stock of the Frisco, and there will be a bond issue to provide for the refunding 4s and the general lien 5s. There is said to be absolute harmony among the various interests represented at the conferences and the plan which will be finally announced, it is argued, will have such backing that it cannot be easily upset.

A Few Days' Difference.

The reception accorded Butte & Superior shares on the Exchange yesterday was quite different from that when they made a false start last Thursday. Incidentally, the difference in prices on the two days showed how far sentiment may change in a short time. The initial price yesterday—the first day that Butte & Superior was officially on the board—was 68½, and this was the highest, later transactions carrying the price down to 65¼. Last week through a misapprehension of a provision of the stock's listing, a few sales were made before the Exchange authorities called a halt. The top price then was 72, but there was a far more generous atmosphere of bullishness about than yesterday.

Building Operations Improve.

The building trade gained ground in April, according to returns made to Engineering News. Seventeen cities in the Eastern States showed a gain of 28 per cent. in the estimated cost of operations from plans filed during the month, as compared with the same month last year. In the same cities in the first four months of the year the gain was about 14 per cent. In the South the ill-effects of the low prices for cotton are reported to be wearing off, for the April decline from the preceding April's record was less than had been expected.

Cutting Operating Expenses.

March earnings statements of two leading Southern roads, published yesterday, were much alike in the losses shown in gross revenues and in the reductions accomplished in expenses. The Atlantic Coast Line, one of the most conservatively managed properties in the country, suffered a decrease of $478,000 in its gross earnings, but cut $467,000 from expenses, and had left after payment of taxes within $17,000 of as much net as for the corresponding month of 1914. The Baltimore & Ohio had a loss of $740,000 in gross earnings and cut $1,018,000 from expenses, so that after taxes there remained an increase of $280,000 in the net operating income.

Overstaying the Market.

Any one can make money in a bull market, but it takes a real speculator to quit in time. It requires less will power to stand a recession of a point or two than to sell out to stop a loss. Not a few amateur operators who had profits a few days ago have overstayed their market, or had at yesterday's final prices, and easily won profits have faded away. The experienced trader never expects to get the top eighth when he sells. He takes a fair profit and is willing to have the buyer or his stocks get the balance.

COTTON DECLINES ON LIQUIDATION

Market Rallies After Low Opening on Bullish Weekly Weather Report.

WAR NEWS DISQUIETING

Cotton yesterday shared in the decline which was general in other markets, and in spite of the fact that the undertone was steady after the first hour a flood of liquidation toward the close sent prices sharply downward to a net loss of about 40 points.

Liverpool was again very disappointing, although certain special conditions were believed to be responsible for the weakness in that market. According to private cables there was heavy selling against purchases of some of the cotton that had been seized by British war vessels, and which had been destined for the Continent. This seemed to be the most plausible explanation for Liverpool's poor showing.

After selling about 20 points lower, the market rallied on a bullish weekly weather report, but there was quiet selling by some of the bulls, who let go lines which had been accumulated at much lower prices. The moving cause of this liquidation was undoubtedly the report that Japan had sent a forty-eight-hour ultimatum to China, and that Japanese nationals had been instructed by their Consuls to leave China on short notice. Toward the close the liquidation became urgent, and the market presented a demoralized appearance.

October broke below the 10c level for the first time since the middle of March. Wall Street houses were particularly active in the selling. There was good buying by some of the trade interests on the decline, but demand was not sufficient to absorb these offerings except at recessions.

The weekly weather report stated that the weather had been unfavorable for the crop except in the central States. Continued wet and cloudy weather in Texas still further delays planting, and much replanting will be necessary. In the districts east of the Mississippi drought is hindering growth and delaying germination of late planted cotton. The report on Texas said that dry, sunshiny weather was badly needed. The weather details from Texas showed scattered showers, ranging from ⅛ of an inch to more than one inch at about forty stations.

Sentiment just now is very unsettled, and the market leaders are inclined to be governed by developments in international politics to the exclusion of almost every other feature.

Southern spot markets as officially reported were unchanged, 12 to 25 decline.

The local market for spot cotton was quiet, 25 points decline; 10.05 for middling upland.

LONDON MARKET CHEERFUL.

Absence of New Taxation in Budget Helps Tone of Trading.

LONDON, May 5.—Money and discount rates were quiet today. There was a good demand for Treasury bills.

The stock market was more cheerful as traders construed the war news favorably, and the absence of fresh taxation in the budget helped the tone. Investment stocks were steady and Consols advanced a fraction, but oil shares were offered and Chinese and Japanese bonds closed weak.

Most of the business in the American section was in Canadian Pacific, United States Steel, Southern Railway, and Southern Pacific. The closing was quiet and firm.

WABASH DIRECTORS SEEK REARGUMENT

WANT IT CUT TO $500,000

Attorneys for George J. Gould, Winslow S. Pierce, and E. T. Jeffery, defendants in the suit brought by James Pollitz for restoration to the treasury of the Wabash Railroad of $22,000,000 alleged to have been lost in a Wabash bond issue, will appear before the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court tomorrow and submit briefs asking for reargument of the case and for a modification of the judgment of the Appellate Division handed down on April 9. This judgment, concurred in by the full court, held that Messrs. Gould, Pierce, and Jeffery should pay back to the Wabash approximately $6,000,000, representing the interest paid out on the alleged illegal bonds which they, as Directors of the Wabash, had authorized.

It will be contended in the briefs prepared by Rush Taggart, the attorney for the Wabash Railroad Company, and by Pierce & Greer, attorneys for the three Directors, that the court erred in fixing the judgment at approximately $6,000,000. The lawyers, without yielding the right of the Directors to appeal to the Court of Appeals from the decision as it now stands, or as it may be modified, will contend that the judgment should have been for approximately $500,000 instead of $6,000,000.

An affidavit of John C. Otteson, Secretary of the Wabash Railroad Company, forms the basis of the claim for a modification of the judgment. The act complained against in the Pollitz suit was the issuing of about $20,000,000 of refunding bonds and about $17,000,000 Wabash stock, and the exchange of these securities for old securities amounting to about $28,000,000. The court held that the new securities were illegal and that Messrs. Gould, Pierce, and Jeffery were liable for all interest paid out on them from 1907 to 1911, when the Wabash Railroad went into receivership. Justice Dowling, who wrote the Appellate Division opinion, had figured this interest at something more than $4,000,000 and had added nearly $2,000,000 more for interest due to date.

Mr. Otteson, in the affidavit which will be a part of the defendants' brief, contends that the interest on the old bonds which were retired would have gone on as usual if they had not been taken up. He figured this interest at about $3,500,000. Thus the lawyers will contend that the Wabash Directors, assuming the court was right in holding the new bond issue as illegal, should be liable only for the difference between the amount paid on the new bonds and the amount which would have been paid in event the old securities had not been retired. The actual difference between Justice Dowling's figures and those of Mr. Otteson is $423,252, which, with interest to date, would bring the judgment to about $500,000.

The attorneys for Messrs. Gould, Pierce, and Jeffery, it is understood, will ask that the case be sent to a referee for accounting, the referee's figures to be used for the enlightenment of the court in fixing the exact amount due the Wabash Railroad.

Objection to the demand for a reduction of the judgment will be made by J. Aspinwall Hodge, representing Mr. Pollitz. He will argue that the defendants are estopped from pleading non-liability for any part of the coupons paid on an illegal bond issue.

The Pollitz suit was started in 1907 and has been in many courts. Once it reached the United States courts, and there the Wabash Directors were upheld in authorizing the new securities. In the New York State courts the Directors have lost at every stage.

STEEL TRADE IS STRONGER.

Operations Show Improvement and Outlook Is Brighter.

Confidence is reported in steel centres this week that an improvement of buying will shortly appear. Operations by some of the leading producers are on a slightly higher scale than a week ago. The Iron Age says:

With little change in the rate of new buying at home, the steel trade has entered May with more grounds for confidence in the outlook than existed one month ago. In the main this is due to the very heavy foreign business distributed here in April and the further large volume on which negotiations are now being closed. To this is now added the belated promise of freer buying of railroad equipment.

Knowing that much more steel for export will be turned out at their mills in May and June than in March and April, steel makers have been little disposed to add to their bookings by price concessions. Hence with many of them April did not equal March in new orders or shipments. War and other export business becomes thus the pivotal factor at a time when hesitation might have developed in a purely domestic situation.

Steel works operations are now averaging nearer to 75 than to 70 per cent. The Steel Corporation's schedules for this week are at 73.5 per cent. of ingot capacity. Foreign orders may bring this up slightly as the month advances. The statement of unfilled orders as of April 30 is not likely to show much change.

The Iron Trade Review says:

April, in new bookings and specifications, proved a satisfactory month to steel makers generally, and May opens with better promise. Where some companies last month made some gains in bookings over March, others experienced moderate losses, so that the general net result is little changed. This ability of the situation to hold its own while railroad buying, manifestly poor, is in the process of recuperation, offers one of the most wholesome signs for the industry.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE.

Sentiment on the Consolidated Stock Exchange was badly disturbed by international considerations. The market gave way in the afternoon under heavy general selling, with the reaching of stop loss orders adding to the pressure. An adverse construction was placed upon the latest European war advices and attention was also devoted to the prospect of Japan serving an ultimatum upon China. In the early dealings there was a temporary rally from the closing levels of Tuesday. In some instances there were sharp advances, notably by certain of the specialties.

FORM NEW McCRORY CO.

Five and Ten Cent Stores Now in $6,250,000 Corporation.

A new company, known as the McCrory Stores Corporation, a consolidation of the string of five-and-ten-cent stores of the old J. G. McCrory Company, has been formed with a capitalization of $1,250,000 7 per cent. cumulative preferred stock and $5,000,000 common stock. The company will operate a chain of 118 five-and-ten-cent stores which are now located in this city, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh and other cities in the Eastern and Southern States.

It was announced yesterday that a syndicate of bankers, headed by Hornblower and Weeks and Charles E. Merrill & Co., had purchased and resold all of the preferred stock of the new company.

J. G. McCrory, head of the old J. G. McCrory & Co., started in the five-and-ten-cent store business in 1882 with capital of $2,000. He succeeded in building up one of the largest chains of stores in the country. In the last four years the number of stores increased from 69 to 118.

BRANCH BANK REPORT GOOD

Herbert R. Eldridge, Vice President of the National City Bank, who returned here yesterday from Central America on the Ward Line steamship Mexico, said that he had a favorable report to make on conditions for the establishment of branch banks in Panama City and Havana.

Mr. Eldridge was accompanied by Roger L. Farnham, another official of the National City Bank, who went to Cuba and Panama with him to assist in gathering material for a report on the financial conditions of both republics.

George M. Bradt, owner of The Havana Post, who was a passenger on the Mexico, said that Cuba was very prosperous at present on account of the high prices of sugar.

Approves Bond Issue.

ALBANY, May 5.—The up-State Public Service Commission today approved an issue of $13,000,000 fifteen-year 5 per cent. gold debentures of the Harlem River & Port Chester Railroad Company to take up short-term notes, the proceeds of which were used for improvements. The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company, which owns the Harlem River Road, has agreed to take the entire new issue at par.

TO DROP HOLDING COMPANY.

American Coal Products Proposes to Adopt Old Name.

Arrangements are under way to effect a reorganization of the American Coal Products Company. At the last annual meeting many of the stockholders approved of such a plan, and a special meeting is to be called to get the consent of all of the stockholders. It is proposed to do away altogether with the holding company and to rename the company the Barrett Coal Products Company. The new company is to have the same capitalization as the present holding company, so that stocks can be exchanged, share for share. The present company is incorporated in New Jersey, and the advisability of incorporating in a different State will be considered.

The annual report of the American Coal Products Company and its subsidiaries, made public yesterday, shows net sales for 1914 of $16,160,686, a decrease of $240,980, compared with the previous year. The net income was $1,724,021, compared with $2,062,837. After paying dividends there was a surplus of $354,607.

While some depression resulted from the war, it was explained in a circular sent to stockholders that there had been increased activity in the chemical departments of the company due to contracts for explosive ingredients. Any loss in general business, the circular said, would more than be made up by the new chemical orders.

MANY UNDERWRITING BIDS.

Syndicate in the Pennsylvania's $65,000,000 Bonds Oversubscribed.

Applications for participation in the underwriting of $65,000,000 of new general mortgage 4½ per cent. bonds of the Pennsylvania Railroad poured in at such a rate yesterday that Kuhn, Loeb & Co., syndicate managers, announced at the close of business the syndicate had been oversubscribed. It is expected the offering price of the new issue will be announced today.

Bond houses which expect to share in the underwriting were consulted yesterday regarding the price at which the new issue will be brought out. It was intended originally to make the offering price close to par, but reports yesterday made the probable price between 98 and 100. It was said last evening that the matter had not been settled, but that the price would be made on a basis to insure a quick distribution of the offering. The Pennsylvania shares equally with the syndicate in anything received more than 98.

One hundred (100) bonds, Nos. 5701 to 5800, inclusive, of the denomination of $500, aggregating in face value $50,000, maturing July 1, 1951.

Said bonds are subject to call by the City of New Orleans on the first day of July, 1939, or on any interest day thereafter, at par and accrued interest on thirty (30) days notice of its intention to so redeem, published in the official newspaper of the City of New Orleans.

They are, by the aforesaid act and constitutional amendment, exempt from all State, Parish and Municipal taxes, and may be legally invested for the estates of minors and of interdicts, and are receivable by State, Parish and Municipal officers, where, by law, deposits of bonds are allowed or required to be made.

The payment of the principal and interest of said bonds is made a preferential charge upon the net revenues of the Public Belt Railroad of the City of New Orleans, and are and will be issued under and subject to the aforementioned statutes and ordinances, all of which are hereby referred to and made part of this advertisement for greater certainty and particularity.

Said proposals shall be received under and subject to the following conditions, to-wit:

Proposals must be in writing, sealed, and marked on the outside of the envelope "Proposals for the purchase of $500,000 of Public Belt Railroad Bonds of the City of New Orleans," and shall likewise be accompanied by a certified check on some chartered bank in the City of New Orleans, for an amount equal to one per cent. of the aggregate amount of the bid, which said check of the successful bidder or bidders shall be cashed and the proceeds retained by the City of New Orleans as a guarantee that the successful bidder or bidders will comply with its or their bids, and the said proceeds shall be applied to the payment of the bonds last delivered to the successful bidder or bidders, respectively. In case of the neglect or refusal to comply with any bid, the proceeds of said check shall be forfeited to the Public Belt Railroad Commission of the City of New Orleans.

No sale shall be made unless the aggregate of the bids received equals the full amount of the present offering of $500,000, in face value, and the adjudication shall be made to the highest bidder, provided, however, that no adjudication shall take place for less than par and accrued interest. All matured interest coupons shall be cut from said bonds and cancelled, and the successful bidder shall pay the interest which may have accrued on said bonds up to the date of delivery. The bonds shall be paid for in cash as fast as said bonds can be signed and delivered. All bonds will be delivered within thirty days from the opening of said bids. The right is reserved to reject any and all bids.

Further particulars and information will be furnished on application to W. B. Thompson, Commissioner of Public Utilities, the Public Belt Railroad Commission, or to the undersigned. The final opinion of Wood & Oakley, lawyers, Chicago, Ill., as to the legality of this issue will be furnished to the successful bidder if so desired.

A. G. RICKS,
Commissioner of Public Finances of the City of New Orleans.

FOREIGN WOOLS ACTIVE.

Practically the Only Feature of the Market—Business Picking Up.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 5.—The American Cotton and Wool Reporter will say tomorrow:

"Foreign wools, Australian and Capes, were the only feature of the Boston wool market this week. Total sales for the week ran about 1,750,000 pounds, 75 per cent. of these being Australians and Capes, the balance in domestic, being largely pulled and scoured. There is a distinct feeling in the market that fine wools will continue for a long time to be valuable property.

"Coarse wools, which have been most desirable for army cloth purposes, have remained high because of the war. Wools around the world are 50 per cent. higher than the average price.

"Cotton goods are increasing in strength. The knit goods business holds strong. There is a strong feeling that the export trade in this line is going to increase wonderfully and that manufacturers in this country are going to do a large business all around the world. The whole spirit in the textile trade is optimistic."

Bank Clearings Increase.

Bank clearings in April reflect considerable improvement in general business conditions, the total at all leading cities in the United States, according to the statement compiled by R. G. Dun & Co., which includes returns from 129 leading centres, making the most favorable comparison of any month so far this year and amounting to $14,914,393,094, an increase of 0.7 per cent., as compared with the same month last year and 5.0 per cent. as contrasted with the corresponding month in 1913. Much the most notable improvement appears at New York City, that centre reporting increases of 3.8 and 9.4 per cent., respectively, as compared with the two preceding years.

Calumet Increases Dividend.

BOSTON, May 5.—The quarterly dividend rate of the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company was increased today from $5 to $15 a share, the largest quarterly disbursement since 1913.

DEARTH OF SHIPPING.

Not Enough Available Tonnage for the European Trade.

Records at the Custom House show that practically all vessels sailing this port for ports of the Allies are carrying capacity cargoes. In many instances ships are leaving here with deck loads. Contractors furnishing supplies for the Allied nations said yesterday that American manufacturers have now arrived at a point where they are delivering for shipment their maximum outputs.

American shipping is said to be deterred at the present time from entering the field, owing to the restrictions made by the Government War Risk Bureau relative to vessels and cargoes engaged in the European trade. This action is also discouraging various interests from chartering vessels, while another strong factor in the situation is the attitude of Great Britain and France toward neutral ships and cargoes.

As illustrating the unusual conditions prevailing, the case of the Lamport & Holt liner Vestris was cited. This vessel, ordinarily employed between New York and South American ports, has been diverted for a special trip to Havre. The vessel brought up from the Argentine 6,703,075 pounds of fresh beef for the French Army.

Manifests of outgoing vessels made public at the Custom House the last few days reveal that the British Government, unwilling to wait for British vessels, is utilizing the regular Italian liners to take supplies to Gibraltar. One of these steamers, the Perugia, leaving for Genoa, had among other things, the following consignments for Britain's fortress: $25,000 worth of tobacco, including cigars; 646,801 pounds of bacon, and 23,800 pounds of lard.

TELEPHONE AS BUSINESS AID

The effect of the telephone on the conduct of modern business was discussed yesterday at the monthly meeting of the Broadway Association in the Hotel Martinique. About 125 sat down to the luncheon, among whom were Acting Mayor Esterbrook, Aldermen Curran and Brush, and Senator Agnew of New Jersey, as well as twenty-five members of the Harlem Lighting Club.

A number of moving pictures to illustrate the working of the telephone exchanges were explained by W. C. Schmidt of the New York Telephone Company, and three-minute talks were made by O. J. Gude, John David, C. L. Littlefield of the New York Edison Company, Joseph A. Becker of the United Electric Light and Power Company, L. S. Quimby of the Broadway Trust, John F. Gerrity of the Great Northern Hotel, W. D. Rockefeller of the Hotel Imperial and C. A. Bird, representing the theatrical interests. Each of them explained how much work they found it necessary to do nowadays by aid of the telephone.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

Central and South American delegates to the Pan American Financial Conference will be entertained at luncheon today by the New York Chamber of Commerce.

A protective committee for the first mortgage bonds of the United States Reduction & Refining Company, now in receivership, has been formed. It consists of M. N. Buckner, Chairman; Wendell P. Bowman, and J. A. Hayes. The New York Trust Company is named as depository in the call for the bonds. The committee expresses fear that the July 1 interest on the bonds will not be paid.

The Lackawanna Steel Company has negotiated for the sale of 20,000 tons of steel rails to the Russian Government.

The Pacific Gas & Electric Company will redeem $1,500,000 of its one-year 5 per cent. notes, due Dec. 15, on May 27, leaving the company free of all floating debt.

A reprint of the New York State tax law relating to secured debt is being distributed by Sidney Spitzer & Co.

E. H. Rollins & Sons are offering $900,000 Northern New York Power Corporation first mortgage 6 per cent. bonds, dated Jan. 1, 1915, and due, serially, to Jan. 1, 1940.

The Banking Law Journal has published a book on "The Law of Bank Checks," written by John Edson Brady of the New York Bar.

The Butterick Company yesterday declared a dividend of ¾ of 1 per cent., payable on June 1, to stockholders of record on May 17.

The regular examination of the condition of the American Surety Company of New York, which the law requires the Insurance Department of the State of New York to make, has recently been completed. In accordance with the established practice, this examination was made in conjunction with the Insurance Department of the State of Maryland.

The examination was made as of September 30, 1914. Its thoroughness is attested by the fact that it required the services of a corps of examiners for a period of more than three months to perform the work.

Notwithstanding the magnitude of the Company's operations, the report does not contain a single unfavorable criticism of any feature of the Company's condition, business or management. The report concludes as follows:

"A thorough and comprehensive examination of the affairs of this company has been made and the report shows the company to be in sound financial condition. The surplus over all liabilities has been reduced from $657,685.84 reported by the Company on September 30, 1914, to $455,323.67, as a result of this examination. This is due to many changes as set forth in the preceding summary of changes.

"The Company's reserves for losses and claims are adequate, the increase in this reserve being due to delayed notices for losses, of which the Company had no knowledge on September 30, 1914.

"The management is efficient and conservative, great care being exercised in its underwriting, investigation of risks, and supervision of agents."

This Company is accepted by the Federal Government as sole surety on a larger bond than any other company. It is the largest Company in the world transacting a fidelity and surety business exclusively. It has forty Branches in the United States. More than 13,500 local representatives report through these Branches.

F. W. LAFRENTZ, President

New Orleans, Mobile and Chicago Railroad Company

Notice to Holders of First and Refunding Mortgage Five Per Centum Gold Bonds of the Above Company, and to Holders of Unsecured Debts including Deficiency Judgments on Secured Debts, and to Holders of Preferred and Common Stocks of the Above Company:

A large majority of bonds already have been deposited subject to the Plan and Agreement of Reorganization of the above company, adopted by the Bondholders Committee and dated March 24, 1915, and in order that the holders of undeposited bonds, unsecured debts, including deficiency judgments on secured debts, and preferred and common stocks of the above company may have an opportunity of co-operating in the aforesaid Plan and becoming entitled to its benefits, notice is hereby given that the time for the deposits of bonds, unsecured debts, including deficiency judgments on secured debts, and preferred and common stocks of the above company, has been extended until MAY 31, 1915.

No deposits will be received thereafter except with the consent of the Committee, and upon such terms as it may approve.

Copies of the Plan and Agreement of Reorganization may be obtained from the Depositary and Sub-Depositary.

Dated New York, May 6, 1915.

First Mortgage Six Per Cent. Thirty-Year Gold Bonds

The United States Reduction and Refining Company having made certain defaults under the terms and conditions of its First Mortgage dated July 1, 1901, securing the above mentioned bonds, and a Receiver having been appointed on April 22, 1915, in a suit brought by The New York Trust Company, as successor trustee, in the District Court of the United States in the District of Colorado, for the protection of the interests of the bondholders, and it appearing that the interest due July 1, 1915, on said bonds will not be paid, the undersigned at the request of the owners of a large amount of the bonds have agreed to act as a Committee to represent the interests of the bondholders. It is of the utmost importance to enable the Committee to deal promptly and effectively with the situation that bondholders act in concert for their mutual protection, and that they deposit their bonds with the Committee without delay.

The New York Trust Company, 26 Broad Street, New York City, New York, has been appointed the Depositary of the Committee to receive deposits of bonds and to issue Certificates of Deposit therefor.

The Deposit Agreement has been prepared, under the terms and provisions of which the Committee will receive deposits of bonds, with July, 1915, and subsequent coupons attached. Copies of this Agreement may be obtained from the Depositary, or from the Secretary of the Committee.

Mutual Company to Pay Dividend.

The Industrial Mutual Liability Insurance Association, which was formed to take over the risk in the so-called needle industries under the workmen's compensation law, will pay a dividend of 20 per cent. on all one-year policies terminating after June 30, upon the approval of the New York State Insurance Department. The members have been informed that the association has paid every claim in full which has been reported, and where the amount has been awarded by the Workmen's Compensation Commission. The dividend will be paid after a statement has been obtained from each member showing the payroll expenditure and an adjustment has been made of the yearly premium on this basis.

Will Relieve Conditions.

A manufacturer in the coat and suit trade said yesterday that the union's announcement, to the effect that an attempt would be made to establish the protocol in other markets outside of New York, should do much toward relieving the strained relations existing between the employers and the union here. If the unoin is successful, he said, it will mean removing one of the fundamental causes of unrest among the manufacturers themselves. They find other cities flourishing to their disadvantage, he said, because of the laxity of the union in not maintaining standard prices, hours, and other conditions. Consequently they are prone, even where the issue raised by the union is a justifiable one, to raise objection to whatever is put forward by the labor organization.

Accepting a Lower Price.

Factors in the piece goods market who have been following the army contract business closely are puzzled to know what the acceptance of a French contract by one house, at a lower price than was formerly paid, means. To add to the problem the new contract calls for a higher quality of goods, and they must be made at least 5 per cent. better. The price at the same time has been dropped from $1.30 a yard, the original price, to $1.25 a yard. Some sellers are inclined to believe that the contract represents merely an order taken for occupation purposes. Others are of the opinion that the falling off in the number of contracts made the mills anxious to secure business to the extent of granting concessions.

For Trade with Aleppo.

M. N. Demirjian, of Aleppo, Syria, arrived in this city yesterday, and was a caller at the local offices of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Custom House. Mr. Demirjian, who represents several American firms in the Aleppo district, said yesterday that he is desirous of making connections with American manufacturers and exporters interested in sales in his section. Mr. Demirjian stated that while the war has brought trade to a standstill in Turkey so far as American goods are concerned, he is planning an energetic campaign at the close of hostilities. He is especially interested in hardware, machinery, building materials, canned goods, and general lines, finding a ready sale in and about Aleppo. While in town, he will make his headquarters at the Bureau.

Burlap Prices Move Up.

Prices on both light and heavy burlaps that are available for prompt delivery have moved up sharply in this market in the last week or so under the demand brought about by the heavy call for burlap bags from European sources. All sorts of this merchandise are scarce here at the present time and arrivals, from all accounts, are small. As a result, 7½-ounce, forty-inch burlaps have sold in this market in the last day or two at 6 cents even, with the selling basis of eight-ounce goods in the same width put at 6.10 to 6.15 cents. Certain lots of 10-ounce forty-inch goods are being offered here at 7.15 cents, and while sales of 10½-ounce burlaps in that width were made in the recent past at 7.10 cents, they are now being held at 7.25 or better by certain sellers. Offerings in the primary markets are said to be limited, holders of these goods wanting better prices for them.

Glove Duplicates Good.

Sellers of gloves in this market report good duplicate orders on fabric lines from the retail trade. Most of the gloves wanted are long ones, and the favorite shades seem to be all-white and novelties in black and white. The call for chamois gloves is reported to be fair to good. The Fall outlook for the domestic glove manufacturers is said to be very good, providing their operations are not hampered by a shortage of raw materials. French goods will be scarce, it is said, because of the dearth of workmen and glove leather in that country, and the apparent inability of German and Austrian manufacturers to get their goods through will limit offerings of these gloves here in the Fall, unless the war ends in the meantime. Current stocks of imported goods are fairly heavy here just now from all accounts, but they are not expected to last long if they cannot be replenished. Short gloves will lead the Fall demand from present indications, and many novelties are promised.

Button Shoes on the Way?

The opinion seems to be growing in the local shoe market that the fancy lace shoes of the moment will give way this Fall to the button type, and while lace shoes may lead in certain parts of the country, especially where the call for the more extreme novelties is good, it is anticipated that the bulk of the new season's trade will be done on button goods. However, uncertainty in the minds of the retailers as to just what will lead is keeping advance business back, aside from staple lines. The continuance of short skirts is expected to keep in demand the high shoes that have been popular this Spring, and colored effects are also touted, to keep their present position in the face of the endeavors of certain manufacturers to get back to blacks. Button shoes are also thought well of for men, especially cloth tops in staple and novelty colors. Another heavy run on spats is predicted when high-shoe weather comes around again.

Foreign Sardines Scarce.

Jobbers in imported sardines here and the handlers of the fish in Europe have about reached the parting of the ways. The canners in Norway have received such enormous orders from the countries at war, and at such prices that they are slighting the American trade unless wholesalers in this country evince a disposition to pay exorbitant prices for sardines. The Norwegian canners have informed the chief factors here that, if they are not prepared to meet the war prices now being obtained, no American orders will be filled. Jobbers said yesterday that they will exhaust such stocks as they have on hand before negotiating further with the foreign canners. The indications are, it was said, that the American or Canadian products may supplant the foreign products if the European canners refuse to make price concessions. Cables from France are to the effect that no sardines are to be had, nor are there any stocks of sprats of consequence. The Portuguese stocks also are low. The prices now asked abroad were described yesterday by jobbers in this city as "outrageous."

Not All Wash Dresses.

Not all of the dresses that are being offered here this season as wash dresses are really washable, according to a certain up-State buyer. Some of the more elaborate ones, he said yesterday, could hardly survive a trip through the laundry, but they would stand dry cleaning without danger. He thinks that for this reason some sort of a dividing line should be drawn between the real wash dress and the "cleanable" garment. Business on these goods continues active but, as most of the orders call for prompt delivery, the volume of them varies with the fluctuations of the thermometer. Models bearing the semi-tailored label are selling well for immediate delivery, probably as an offshoot of the suit demand this season. Some of them come close to being two-piece suits. Dainty dresses of the "fluffy ruffles" type are also being well taken. Stripes are good throughout, especially the new awning effects for use in pleated skirts, and black and white combinations in checks, stripes and coin spots are good, too. Voiles, organdies, gabardines and tub silks are being used widely by the cutters.

Sheetings Moved Freely.

Active buying of sheetings by the bag manufacturers was the feature of the gray goods market yesterday, there being little business to speak of on printcloths. The immediate needs of buyers of the latter goods seem pretty well filled for the time being, though the drop in cotton that occurred during the day was held responsible for a good part of the day's quiet on these constructions. Neither nearby nor future goods were wanted to any extent, but a few more goods were let out by second-hands at special figures. On the other hand, the bag trade was forced to turn its attention to sheetings by the scarcity of spot burlaps and the high prices that are asked for them in this market. Liberal sales of 3.50, 4.25 and 4.70-yard goods were made at 4⅞ to 5, 4⅛ to 4⅝ and 4 to 4⅛ cents, respectively. The demand for fancies and specialties kept up well and fine goods were not neglected to any great extent. Spot prices on staple printcloths were:

Americans Buying Little Wool.

LONDON, May 5.—A smaller catalogue, consisting of 8,400 bales, was offered at the wool auction sales today. Fairly steady prices were realized at the recent reduction. Good wools met with a quicker sale. American buyers have purchased barely 2,000 bales so far.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—The Eastern disturbance has passed into the ocean, but generally low pressure prevails throughout the country, without a barometer reading as high as 30 inches. There is a pronounced disturbance over Southern New Mexico, another over Northern Utah, and a moderately narrow trough extending from Northwestern Iowa to West Lake Superior.

As a result, unsettled weather prevails generally, except in the Atlantic States and the Ohio and upper Mississippi Valleys, and rains have fallen over the greater portion of the unsettled area, with some snow in Southeastern Wyoming. There were also local rains in New England and the Middle Atlantic States.

Temperatures are generally below the seasonal average east of the Rocky Mountains, except in the north upper Lake region and also in the South Plateau and over the area from Arizona and Southern Utah. Northeastward to Western Minnesota they have fallen decidedly to between thirteen and twenty-six degrees below the seasonal average.

There will be rain or snow Thursday in the East Plateau and Rocky Mountain region, and rain in the Central and South Plains States and the Missouri, Mississippi, and lower Ohio Valleys, and showers in the West Gulf States and the upper Lake region, follower by generally fair weather Friday west of the Mississipi.

There will be rain Friday in the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys and the Lake region, and showers in the East Gulf and South Atlantic States. In New England, the Middle Atlantic States, the Western Plateau, region, and the Pacific States the weather will be generally fair Thursday and Friday.

It will be cooler Thursday in the Missouri Valley and the Southwest, and Friday in the Gulf States, Tennessee, the Ohio and upper Mississippi Valleys, and probably the upper Lake region. It will be warmer Friday in the Northwest and the Rocky Mountain region.

Warnings of freezing temperature have been issued for Minnesota, North Dakota, and Wyoming.

Winds for Thursday and Friday along the North and Middle Atlantic Coasts will be moderate west, becoming variable; South Atlantic Coast, gentle to moderate, mostly south.

FORECASTS TODAY AND FRIDAY.

Eastern New York, New Jersey, and Eastern Pennsylvania—Fair Thursday; increasing cloudiness Friday.

Southern New England—Fair Thursday, Friday, partly cloudy.

Western New York—Partly cloudy Thursday; rain Friday or Friday night.

Northern New England—Fair Thursday and Friday.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

Political Hypotheses.

The Republican Chairman of Texas says with plenty of time and money Texas could be carried for the Republican ticket by 250,000 majority. Yes, and if we had 500,000 gallons of chloroform and a sufficient number of men to apply it right, we could carry Pennsylvania Democratic today by 500,000.—Houston Post.

Medical Note.

COMMODITIES MARKETS

WHEAT.

Underlying conditions in the wheat market were again two-sided, owing to the conditions abroad and the favorable crop prospects in America, but the latter proved the dominant feature of the day, and after an early advance prices developed weakness, and at the close were 1@1½ points net lower. In the local cash market No. 2 red Winter wheat was quoted at 1.68 and No. 2 hard at 1.70, cost, insurance, and freight, track; No. 1 Northern Duluth, 1.65, and No. 1 Northern Manitoba, 1.67½, cost, insurance, and freight, Buffalo.

CORN.

The market for corn was only moderately active and while firmness in Buenos Aires had a tendency to check selling, the weakness in wheat and a liberal interior movement caused an easier tone and at the close of the day values were ½ to 1c net lower. The local cash market was easy, No. 2 yellow corn quoted at 87¼c, prompt shipment.

COFFEE.

Trading in the coffee market was again quiet, the total day's business amounting to 18,250 bags, and in the absence of demand prices were slightly easier under moderate local selling, closing 2 to 4 points net decline. On the spot trading was quiet with Rio grades unchanged on the basis of 7⅝c for 7's, while Santos was ⅛c higher at 10⅛c for 4's.

PROVISIONS.

The provision market was comparatively quiet, and, after showing some firmness early owing to talk of a better cash demand and on firmness in the hog position, prices sagged off with grain and closed generally lower. Receipts of hogs at Chicago were 25,000; estimated for Thursday, 17,000. Kansas City received 9,000 and Omaha 11,000.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 12,132 packages. A great deal of the stock reported today came in and was sold yesterday. Demand continues fairly good, though buyers are taking stock only against immediate needs. Possibly the tone is not quite so firm, but there is a possibility that all of the stock will be wanted this week. Receivers are anxious, however, to keep clean floors and are losing no opportunity to sell. There is a great scarcity of ladles and packing stock, and the feeling on such is firm. Creamery, extras, (92 score,) 31c; higher scoring lots, 31½@32c; firsts, 29@30½c; seconds, 27@28½c; thirds, 24@26c; creamery, held, firsts, 26½@27½c; seconds, 25@26c; thirds, 23@24c; State dairy, finest, 30c; good to prime, 28@29c; common to fair, 23@27c; renovated, extras, 23½@24c; firsts, 22@23c; lower grades, 20@21c; imitation creamery, firsts, 21½@22c; ladles, current make, firsts, 21@21½c; seconds, 20@20½c; lower grades, 19@19½c; packing stock, current make, No. 2, 19½c; lower grades, 18@19c.

EGGS.—Receipts yesterday, 26,652 cases. The arrivals are lighter, and a large part of the finest selected stock is still going directly to storage warehouses. The offerings on the open market are of irregular quality, and the proportion of strictly fine goods is not large. General demand is good, and the market is showing a firmer tone, most noticeable on the highest qualities. The better grades are showing some improvement, although outside quotations are extreme. Nearby white eggs about steady, but there is still a large surplus over trade needs, and straight lots are freely offered at 23c and less. Fresh gathered, extras, per dozen, 22½c; storage packed, extra firsts, 21¼@22c; storage packed firsts, 20¼@21½; regular packed, extra firsts, 21@21½c; regular packed, firsts, 19¼@20½c; seconds, 18@19c; thirds and poorer, 17@17½c; dirties, No. 1, 17@17½; No. 2 and poorer, 15½@16½c; checks, good to prime, dry, 15½@16c; culls and poor checks, 10@15c; State Pennsylvania and nearby, hennery whites, fine to fancy, 23@23½c; defective, 22@22½c; gathered whites, as to size and quality, 21½@22½c; Western, gathered whites, 21@22c; State, Pennsylvania and nearby, hennery browns, 22@22½c; gathered brown and mixed colors, 20@21½c; duck eggs, State and nearby, Indian Runner, 25@27c; Baltimore, per dozen, 22@24c; Western, 20@23c; Tennessee and other Southern, 19@20c.

WANT TO BE FAIR.

One-Sided Testimony Barred Out by the Appraisers.

Judge Sullivan, President of the Board of General Appraisers, made it plain yesterday that protests against tariff exactions coming before the lower customs tribunal will hereafter have to be bona fide cases in order to receive full consideration. The intimation was given during the trial of an importer's protest involving the classification under the tariff law of siboline or ripple cloth.

It seems that the testimony was one-sided and, had the Board made a decision on the question, it would have been obliged to bring in a verdict for the manufacturer-importer. F. W. Brooks, Jr., counsel for H. G. Porter & Co., Stern & Cohen, and C. Bahnsen & Co., the protestants in yesterday's case, started to register an objection, but Judge Sullivan said he was aware of the character of the case referred to by the Government counsel, and would not allow the Government to put in the evidence in the former case as its testimony in the present case.

The Board's Executive said the testimony taken in the case he referred to, was ex parte, and for the sole purpose of obtaining a ruling favorable to domestic manufacturing interests, and that protests of this kind would not receive serious attention from the Board. Judge Sullivan gave the Government one month in which to obtain witnesses to support the claim for the higher duty. The goods were assessed at 45 per cent. as pile fabrics, while the importers in yesterday's protests claimed that the fabrics are not of the pile variety, but should be admitted at 40 per cent. as mohair cloth.

Why Our Soldiers Desert.

Within ten years 46,000 enlisted men deserted from the United States Army. In 1911 the number of deserters was 7 per cent. of the enlistments. In 1913 it was 17 per cent. Yet we pay from two to five times as much as any European power for effective riflemen. What is the matter with Uncle Sam's service?

There was some hot talk at Washington a few days ago, when Congressman Gardner declared that the United States is wholly unprepared for war. Now whether or not our military force should be increased is a question over which there is room for argument. But every one must agree that the existing army should be made into an efficient machine. The many desertions indicate that something is wrong.

It has sometimes been remarked that the army has less democratic feeling than the navy. Perhaps this has something to do with the unpopularity of army service. Anyway, critics are complaining that when a private gets drunk he/is apt to get a stiff term in jail, while when an officer becomes overconvivial he may get off with a mere reprimand.

The United States Army officers are a fine appearing body of men, smooth, resourceful, brainy. Nevertheless, an offensive caste feeling may have grown up.

An Italian padrone may get work out of his so-called dagoes by swearing and cursing. The foreman of a shop of American mechanics gets results, not by loud talk, but by quiet firmness and even-handed justice. He associates with them on a common level.

Army officers are probably too much given to an air of aloofness and superiority. There are ways of maintaining discipline other than requiring the subordinate to salute and take a position as an inferior. Perhaps if there were more of a spirit of comradeship between officers and men, army efficiency would not be so upset by the incessant stream of desertions.—Easton Daily Free Press.

The Editor Likes It.

When an editor's personal mail includes an offer from a responsible brokerage house to sell him all or any part of 200 shares of United States Steel common at 50 and an advertisement of men's shoes costing from $6 to $10 a pair, he is so flattered that he feels for a moment almost like a power in the financial community.—Ohio State Journal.

Too Much Restraint.

The censors refer in their restrained way to what the armies are doing to each other as pushing, when we shouldn't think that speaking of it as shoving would involve the slightest exaggeration.—Ohio State Journal.

AWAIT CHINESE MERCHANTS

Mayor Appoints Welcoming Committee for Party Due May 30.

A party of Chinese merchants, representing the Chamber of Commerce of the Republic of China, will reach this city about May 30, and will stay here seven or eight days. Mayor Mitchell has nominated a committee of business men to receive them and entertain them during their visit.

The Chairman is Willkam C. Breed and the other members are W. A. Marble, W. C. Mead, W. F. Morgan, and Silas G. Webb of the Merchants' Association; Seth Low, Welding Ring, Serene S. Pratt, E. H. Outerbridge, and James R. Morse of the Chamber of Commerce; E. P. Thomas, G. G. Allen, W. D. Straight, John Foord, and E. F. Cronkhite of the American Asiatic Association, and Alba B. Johnson, C. M. Muchnic, and E. V. Douglass of the American Manufacturers' Export Association.

Cases Calling for the Interpretation of the Tariff.

Memorandum books with pencils attached, are not dutiable as entireties, according to a decision made yesterday by the Board of General Appraisers in the protest case of B. Illfelder & Co. The books were in chief value of paper and the pencils of wood. Collector Malone assessed duty separately on the books at 25 per cent. ad valorem under the Tariff act of 1909, and on the pencils at 45 cents per gross, and 25 per cent. ad valorem under the pencil provision. The importers' claim was for a single tax of 25 per cent. as "books." Judge Fischer said there was nothing to show error in the Collector's action, and overruled the protest.

A. Held was sustained in claims for lower duty on merchandise described on the invoices as balsam peru, crude balsam, and Peruvian balsam. The Collector returned the product under the Tariff act as an aromatic substance with duty at 20 per cent. ad valorem. While several claims were made in the protests, the board sustained the one for entry at 10 per cent. as crude balsam. A similar protest by Silva, Bussenius & Co., was also sustained.

Three decisions were made by the board affecting the classification of metal articles. W. C. Carey, Buffalo, imported ball bearings in completed form used in connection with shaft hangers. Duty was levied at 35 per cent. ad valorem as ball bearings, while the importer claimed a rate of 20 per cent. as manufactures of metal. The board held that the bearings were properly assessed.

Frank S. Betz & Co. and V. Mueller & Co., Chicago, claimed that forceps, clamps, tweezers, needle holders, and like instruments entered under the tariff, were properly dutiable at 20 per cent. ad valorem as metal manufactures. The board disagreed, and affirmed the Collector's tax of 30 per cent. under the provision for "nippers and pliers of all kinds." The board declined to reverse the Collector's assessment on knife blades imported by George Quirk. The importer failed to appear at the time of the hearing.

Contentment.

"Contentment is always a comparative virtue."

"What do you mean?"

"Bigsby used up a dozen fifty-dollar tires from April to October, but he's tickled to death because he made his patched and busted garden hose last through the Summer."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Sad Blow.

A Louisiana man, recently returned from a trip to the city, says if the stickpin he bought as a souvenir isn't a diamond he has been "stung" for his fifty cents.—Kansas City Times.

One Thing Women Don't Do.

"It certainly does. But I never saw one buy a bottle of hair restorer from a bald-headed barber."—Houston Post.

It Made O'Toole Wrathy.

"How did the foight start, Maginnis?"

"O'Flaherty asked O'Toole to have a glass o' orange phosphate."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Nothin' Serious.

"What did your father die of?" the doctor asked an Atchison negro, who was being examined for life insurance. "Ah don't know, boss," he replied, "but it wasn't nothing serious."—Kansas City Star.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

City.

Subjects and weights for fire drill expert are as follows: Experience, 4; duties, 5; report, 1. Seventy per cent. general average is required. The duties are to drill and teach inmates the use of means of egress, to organize fire fighting brigades and to give instructions in fire prevention. The salary is $975 a year. The minimum age is 25 years.

To make available to all interested information concerning examinations under the municipal civil service, President Moskowitz has had a manual of information drawn up and distributed through all the branch libraries and similar institutions in the city. In it will be found a partial list of forthcoming examinations, as well as the subjects of the tests and the weights to be given for each of them. In addition, Mr. Moskowitz has fitted up a Bureau of Information on the fourteenth floor of the Municipal Building.

United States.

The commission announces for June 8 a competitive examination for physiologist, for men only, to fill a vacancy in the Dairy Division, Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., at a salary ranging from $2,500 to $3,000 a year. The duties will be to take charge of investigations in the secretion of milk and will involve a general fundamental study of the factors controlling the secretion of milk. Competitors will not be assembled for examination, but will be rated on education, experience and publications. Applicants must not have reached their fiftieth birthday on the date of the examination. Further information may be obtained of the commission, Washington, D. C.

EDUCATION NOTES.

The elementary school Principals will hold a meeting at the Board of Education Hall at 10 A. M. on Saturday.

The cornerstone of the new building of the Evander Childs High School, 184th Street and Morris Avenue, will be laid at 3 P. M. today by the Committee on Buildings of the Board of Education.

"The Private Secretary" will be given under the auspices of the Bushville High School Dramatic Society tomorrow evening for the benefit of the Students' Aid Fund.

Among the matters that will come before the Board of Education at its next meeting is a recommendation that the by-laws be amended so as to provide that regular teachers and teachers of special branches assigned to teach pre-vocational classes in elementary schools shall receive additional compensation at the rate of $200 a year.

A recommendation from the Board of Superintendents that the by-laws be amended in reference to the eligibility for license as laboratory assistant in high schools, has been referred to the Committee on By-Laws and Legislation.

THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Additional evidence of the realty and building activity in the Fordham Heights section of the Bronx in the vicinity of the Grand Boulevard and Concourse was given yesterday in the sale of a plot of sixteen lots which evidently forecasts important building improvements. That section of the borough has witnessed a number of large deals in the last few months, and only the preceding day plans were filed for ten five-story apartment houses to cost $240,000, just north of Fordham Road.

The recent deal, which is the largest single transaction in that locality for some time, involved the sale of the plot, 200 by 200, on the east side of Ryer Avenue, 99 feet south of 182d Street, and running through to Valentine Avenue, a frontage of 200 feet on each avenue. The property was sold through Achilles R. Scharsmith & Co. and David Kraus for Mrs. Fannie M. Wallace, to an investing client. The property was reported as having been sold a short time ago.

Important Lease on Twenty-third Street.

An important lease in the old Twenty-third Street shopping district was announced yesterday by the firms of L. J. Carpenter, and Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., & Co., who leased to William Guerin & Co., now located at 33 Park Place, new quarters in the building at 43 to 47 West Twenty-third Street, running through to 24 to 28 West Twenty-fourth Street.

The lease, which involves the entire sixth floor of the remodeled building, formerly occupied by Horner & Co., furniture manufacturers, is for a long term of years.

Recently several important leases have been made on Twenty-third Street, between Broadway and Sixth Avenue, and on Saturday last the Cosmopolitan Garden, which occupies a portion of the old Stern store, was opened to the public.

Upper Manhattan Dwelling Sale.

John R. Davidson has sold for the Van Kannel Realty Company 519 West 141st Street, a four-story two-family dwelling on plot 16 by 99.11 to Alexander Charlton.

Plaintiff Buys Concord Hall Apartment.

The chief feature in the auction market at 14 Vesey Street yesterday was the sale in foreclosure proceedings of the nine-story Concord Hall Apartment House, covering a plot 100 by 100 on the southeast corner of Riverside Drive and 119th Street. It was formerly owned by the New York Real Estate Security Company, and the action was brought by Emily Loewy to recover a mortgage judgment of about $22,000. She was the buyer on a bid of $21,000, over prior liens, aggregating $351,000, with interest.

Twenty-second Street Tenement Sale.

Pease & Elliman have sold for G. F. W. Poggenburg the five-story brick tenement on a plot 25 by 100 at 405 East Twenty-second Street.

Bronx.

Duff & Brown Company have sold for Jacob Ryttenberg to a client for investment 250 East 136th Street, a five-story flat 25 by 100.

The Hermax Realty Company sold to an investing client of Paul Bultman 429 and 431 East 156th Street a five-story flat on a lot 50 by 100.

$100,000 Deal Near Astoria.

The G. X. Mathews Company, large builder in the Ridgewood section of Brooklyn, has purchased a large tract in Long Island City, with frontage on both sides of Eighteenth Avenue, between Jackson Avenue and Broadway. The consideration was about $100,000. The tract is part of the holdings of the Cabinet Land Company and a part of the old Bragaw farm, Astoria. Henry C. Johnson, Jr., acted as the broker in the deal.

Brooklyn.

The Jerome Property Corporation sold 159 Garfield Place between Sixth and Seventh Avenues, a four-story, eight family apartment house on a lot 30 by 128 for M. Mulleo to a client for investment. Also 389 Tenth Street between Seventh and Eighth Avenues, a three-story apartment for E. O'Connell to a client for investment.

I. Salzberg sold for the C. W. Construction Company, to S. Robins, a three-story, two family stucco cottage, consisting of eighteen rooms, on a plot of 40 by 100, on the northeast corner of Forty-seventh Street, and Fifteenth Avenue.

New Jersey.

Frederick Knipping, Jr., has sold the two four-story brick store and apartment property on the northeast corner of Hudson Avenue and Eleventh Street, West New York, and a large residence property on Rockview Avenue, North Plainfield.

Twelve Tenements in Long Lease.

Henry London has leased for the East Eleventh Street Holding Company, the twelve five-story tenements, at 304 to 316 East Twelfth Street and 301 to 319 East Eleventh Street, for a term of years at an aggregate rental of $60,000.

Commercial Leases.

The Cross & Brown Company has leased the corner store and the south half of the sixth floor in building on the southeast corner of Broadway and Fifty-fourth Street to the Pullman Sales Company.

The Aeolian Company have leased for a long term from Andrew J. Bradley through M. & L. Hess, Incorporated, the entire upper part of Bradley Building 1, on East Tenth Street, Long Island City, comprising about 30,000 square feet. The premises will be used as a distributing station. J. A. Harrington represented the lessor.

Pease & Elliman have leased for a term of years, for Lynn S. Hoe, the entire ground floor and basement at 2,861 Third Avenue, through to Melrose Avenue, to the A. S. Beck Shoe Company who, after extensive alterations will occupy the premises as a branch establishment.

Big Loft for Printing Trades.

The Birwin Realty Corporation, composed of Andrew J. Kerwin, and William H. Birkmire have filed plans for a $400,000 loft building at 221 to 231 West Thirty-eighth Street, between Seventh and Eighth Avenues.

The new structure which is designed to meet the growing demands of the printing trade in this particular section will occupy a plot 103 by 98.9, now occupied by old four and five-story buildings. Plans for the new structure were prepared by Mr. Birkmire.

New Long Island City Building.

The Turner Construction Company has been awarded the contract by the Courtney Development Company for the construction of a new manufacturing building, located at Annabel and Gossman Avenues, Long Island City.

The building will be 235 by 265, part two stories and part one story, and is to be occupied by G. Schirmer, Inc.

An Effort to Lighten Tax Burden.

The Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests has issued a circular letter urging upon all property owners and taxpayers' associations the necessity of appearing in Albany at the series of public hearings to be given by the Governor next week upon the financial bills passed by the Legislature in the closing moments of the session, and now before him for approval.

During the controversy between State and city officials, as to the need of a direct State tax, the special committee of the Advisory Council upon this matter was assured by the Governor that these hearings would be granted to the property owners, in an effort to lighten their tax burdens.

Real Estate Notes.

Frederick W. Rothschild is not the President of the Red Shield Realty Company which sold the property at 124 to 128 West Forty-fifth Street on Monday last, he having resigned some months ago.

The Real Estate Owners' Protective Association, of which Joseph S. Schwab is President, has called a mass meeting for Monday night at the Hotel Majestic, Central Park West and Seventy-second Street, to protest against the direct tax measure.

The Ruland & Whiting Company has moved its uptown office from 331 Madison Avenue to 693 Madison Avenue.

The Garrick Theatre property at 63 to 67 West Thirty-fifth Street has been transferred by Annie I. Harrigan to the Braham Realty Company. There will be no change in the character of the property at present.

REAL ESTATE AT AUCTION.

Rarely, If Ever—

The plot on the northeast corner of 138th Street and Third Avenue is such a piece of Property.

On this corner, the tenant pays all taxes and expenses. He owns the building which secures the lease. Your rental is SURE and NET. This is a splendid piece for an investor.

This is better than a State or City bond, as the valuation will increase tremendously when the Subway is completed and when the term of the present lease expires the rental will increase in proportion.

Forest Hills Gardens

A Forward Movement in Suburban Development

Successfully meeting a growing demand for a community in which design, engineering and stability of construction are the cardinal principles.

Ample capital to adequately work out its problems; protective restrictions, completed improvements, and property marketed on a fair basis, is the security offered to an investor at Forest Hills Gardens.

Obviously it is unwise to invest in a site or a home before having seen this property, and investigated the qualifications that determine Forest Hills Gardens' pre-eminence in suburban development. Houses nearing completion and plots of varying dimensions are offered for sale.

If desired, upon a small initial investment, convenient terms for the unpaid balance can be arranged, whereby the payments are extended over a period of years, approximating what would otherwise be rent.

Transportation, booklet, or any desired information may be secured by addressing Department S, Sage Foundation Homes Company, 47 West 34th Street, New York, or—

SAYS WAR MAY SHIFT DRUG CENTRE HERE

No Doubt of It if America Will Seize Its Chance, Expert Now Abroad Asserts.

BIG CALL FOR CHEMICALS

BERLIN, April 20, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—The war affords America an opportunity to become the drug and chemical centre of the world, in place of London and Amsterdam, if America but knows enough to grasp the advantage, in the opinion of Dr. C. E. Vanderkleed, chief chemist of a big Philadelphia manufacturing and biological chemical concern, who has been touring Europe for several months.

This possible leadership can come, however, only in case American chemists develop the ability to make synthetic chemicals, as Germany already has done, out of the raw and crude materials that come largely from South America and Central America, and that now, because of danger to shipping, are being sent in huge quantities to New York, instead of Amsterdam and England. Once America achieves some of the highly specialized German ability along this line, he believes, she will be able to compete for all time with the rest of the world, and attract to herself the lion's share of the raw materials so close at hand.

Dr. Vanderkleed's travels through Germany, Austria, Holland and Denmark have shown him that there is a scarcity of serums in practically all of the countries at war, as well as a scarcity of some opiates. There is consequently a market here for every ounce that can be made in America and shipped over.

Practically every laboratory in Europe, he finds, is manufacturing to the limit of its capacity serums for tetanus, dysentery and spinal meningitis, three o fthe great war scourges. Each country, however, is hampered by two things—the length of time that is necessary to produce serums of the requisite strength, and a universal shortage of the high grade horses used in the manufacture of the medicines. But Dr. Vanderkleed finds that all the nations seem to be fairly well supplied with the necessary vaccines, which can be and are being prepared in great quantities and in a comparatively short time.

The time difference between making the serums and the vaccines is due to the essential difference in the characteristics of the two medicines. The vaccine is but a quantity of the dead bacteria of a given disease which, when injected into the blood, causes no harm but does stimulate the growth of live anti-bodies that ward off the disease if it comes. The serum, on the other hand, takes from three to six months in preparation, and consists of a quantity of live anti-bodies that have been painstakingly brought up to a standard strength. They are created by inoculating sound and healthy horses with increasingly large doses of bacteria of a given disease. The animal, less subject than any other to the diseases, gradually and increasingly generates a powerful anti-toxin, and when in the proper state of health will eventually yield from three to four quarts of the serum.

Germany and Austra, Dr. Vanderkleed finds, manufacture great quantities of typhoid vaccine, and have on hand plenty of vaccine for cholera, plague and other diseases to which the soldiers may be liable. Following the example of the United States, these countries during the war have introduced compulsory vaccination against typhoid in their armies.

With the single possible exception of cocaine, Germany at least possesses all the opiates she needs. There are quantities of chloroform, ether, morphine and opium on hand. The cocaine is coming in from New York, which gets it in turn from South America. To some extent also there is a market here, Dr. Vanderkleed believes, for chemicals out of which can be made materials for combating the insect pest that is such a factor in the East.

CITY BREVITIES.

Edward Trainor of 320 West Forty-second Street was held in the Night Court last night for refusing to pay a taxicab bill of $46 which, the chauffeur said, was incurred while Trainor was visiting friends on Long Island.

Ten girls who escaped from the Magdalen Home a week ago were discharged in the Women's Night Court yesterday when they promised Magistrate Barlow that they would abide by the rules of the institution.

Ways and means for keeping the delinquent child from criminal life will be discussed tonight by the Public Education Association at the Russell Sage Foundation Building, 130 East Twkenty-second Street.

Agents of the Department of Justice reported yesterday that they had found $1,000 worth of morphine in a room at 146 East Forty-fourth Street. Later they arrested Charles Randall, who lives at 146 East Forty-fourth Street and had him held at Police Heeadquarters pending further inquiry.

IN NEW JERSEY.

NEWARK.—Frederick Gugenhein, 23 years old, of 23 Beacon Street, Newark, who was arrested Monday, was identified yesterday by Henry Ring as one of the two men who robbed him in his grocery store at 480 Springfield Avenue on the night of April 15. Gugenheim was held in $2,000 bail.

NEWARK.—Pauline Blanker, charged with conspiracy to defraud in connection with a matrimonial scheme, was arraigned before Judge Haight in the United States District Court yesterday, and entered a plea of not guilty. Angeli Guisti of West New York was convicted of taking money from those who wanted wives, and is serving a three years' sentence. He guaranteed to furnish the bride at a price. The woman arraigned yesterday is said by the Government officials to be the bride that was "sold" six or seven times.

NEWARK.—A bright yellow band sewed around the left sleeve will in the near future be an indication that the little boy or girl wearing it is suffering from whooping cough. This action was recommended by the Health Board pursuant to a suggestion from Dr. E. G. Wherry. To enforce the wearing of the yellow bands by those children who have whooping cough, the Health Board will enlist the aid of the City Council.

WEST ORANGE.—West Orange, the birthplace of the moving picture, is turning against its famous product. Last week the largest "movie" house closed its doors because of lack of patronage, and today the two remaining owners of picture playhouses asked the Town Council to reduce the license fee from $250 to $75. Unless the decrease is allowed the owners declare that they will have to close up shop.

TRENTON.—Delegates to represent New Jersey at the eleventh annual conference of the National Child Labor Committee, to be held in San Francisco May 29, were named by Governor Fielder yesterday as follows: Rev. Walter Reed Hunt, Orange; Miss Margaret MacNaughton, Jersey City; John A. Cullen, Newark; Miss Anna McIlvaine, Trenton; Mrs. George W. Prall, Lambertville, and Benjamin F. Edsall, Newark.

CAMDEN.—William S. Davison, general storekeeper and Postmaster at Oaklyn, was arrested by Post Office Inspectors yesterday and charged with embezzling $750 of the postal monies in his possession.

St. Peter's College Alumni Dine.

A hundred members of the Alumni Association of St. Peter's College of Jersey City, held their annual dinner in the Hotel McAlpin last night. Among the guests was Joseph P. Tumulty, Secretary to President Wilson. The speakers included Rev. C. B. Pallen, Thomas F. Martin, Secretary of State of Ney Jersey; Rev. Myles A. Mc Loughlin, Joyce Kilmer, Nelson Hume, Charles B. Hermans, and Rev. James F. McDermott, President of the college. Joseph Egan, President of the Alumni Association, was toastmaster.

Reciprocity Club Chartered.

The Reciprocity Club of America, New York section, was incorporated at Albany yesterday. The principal office is in New York City and the particular objects are the promotion of business interests. The Directors are: Joseph F. Gleason of Larchmont, George M. Clark of Brooklyn, J. M. Kohlmeier, and George E. Van Vorst of New York; A. E. Foote of Elizabeth, W. S. Pitts of Richmond Hills, and A. W. Varian of Shoreham.

JAPAN TO PRESENT ULTIMATUM TODAY

SUNDAY THE OUTSIDE LIMIT

Tokio Ultimatum, Now in Japanese Minister's Hands, Expires at 6 P. M. That Day.

LAST HOUR CONCESSIONS

But Peking Refuses to Accept All Demands—Washington Hears of New Method of Negotiating.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PEKING, May 6.—The Japanese Minister received from Tokio by cable this afternoon the terms of an ultimatum to be presented to the Chinese Government. This will be communicated on Friday before 3 P. M., although no conference has been held since Saturday. Pourparlers have been proceeding between the Foreign Office and the Japanese Legation, the latter having intimated a readiness to lend its good offices in transmitting any overtures the Chinese Government desired to make.

Today the Vice Minister visited the Japanese Legation and intimated that China was ready to concede the Japanese demand for joint farming and manufacturing enterprises in Mongolia, and also the following: That disputes in Manchuria concerning Japanese settlers be tried in Japanese courts; that Japan take over the treaty rights in Shantung enjoyed by Germany; that Japanese might build schools, churches, and hospitals on land leased from Chinese, and that Japan might finance and construct the Nan Chang-Chaochow-Fu railway provided Great Britain would approve.

When the demands were first presented, China, while denying that Japan had any justice in seeking to impose them, agreed to discuss them from the point of view of friendly neighborly relations. As a result of the conferences, China has conceded practically all the demands which Japan had communicated to the powers as seeking. China strove to avoid committing herself on any points infringing her sovereignty or the treaty rights of other powers, though the Japanese pressed several demands which the Chinese held would, if agreed to, impair their independence as a nation and establish Japanese suzerainty.

Japan, however, insisted on the acceptance of the demands in toto, and the Chinese made further concessions, but again refused those which she deemed to affect her sovereignty.

China to Resist If Attacked.

As the outcome of a war campaign waged in Japan, the ultimatum was sent to M. Hioki, to be delivered on Friday. China will issue a declaration giving the history of the negotiations, explaining her position to the powers interested, and will resist if attacked.

The President and the Cabinet are unanimously determined to surrender no point impairing sovereignty or infringing treaty obligations. There is intense indignation at the high-handed action of Japan, which is regarded by the Chinese as that of a conquering nation, even less excusable than the action of Germany toward Belgium.

Foreign opinion throughout China is antagonistic to the Japanese attitude. Should the demands be assented to it is the general opinion that the door will be closed in China, and similarly in Mancuhria, to the detriment of American trade.

It is evident that Japan has contemplated war, as Japanese subjects have been called in from outlying portions of China and there has been a big exodus of Japanese from Peking in the last few days. The Chinese press unanimously urges the Government to remain firm, as further concessions would endanger national existence, and the position could not be made worse by fighting.

Should hostilities begin, the first point of attack will probably be Mukden, where 50,000 Chinese troops are stationed. A considerable number of Chinese troops are at Jehol, and five Japanese warships are off Chinwantao. In the event of Peking's being attacked, the Chinese Government, following precedent, will retire, probably to Sian Fu. Peking will be defended.

The patriotism of the Chinese is deeply stirred; and it is expected that the newly created Voluntary National Salvation Fund will be placed at the disposal of the Government. One Cantonese with property of $120,000 contributed $100,000. The President's masterly calmness inspires confidence in the administration.

China is on the horns of a dilemma. If the Japanese demands are granted revolution will ensue in China; if they are not granted, Japan will use military force.

(By The Associated Press.)

Washington Announces Attitude toward China

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 7. — The State Department issued today this statement on the attitude of the United States toward the Chino-Japanese negotiations:

In order that there may be no misunderstanding of the position of the United States in reference to the negotiations pending between Japan and China the following announcement is made:

At the beginning of negotiations the Japanese Government confidentially informed this Government of the matters which were under discussion, and accompanied the information by the assurance that Japan had no intention of interfering with either the political independence or territorial integrity of China, and that nothing thta she proposed would discriminate against other powers having treaties with China or interfere with the "open door" policy to which all the leading nations are committed.

This Government has not only had no thought of surrendering any of its treaty rights with China, but it has never been asked by either Japan or China to make any surrender of these rights. There is no abatement of its interest in the welfare and progress of China, and its sole interest in the present negotiations is that they may be concluded in a manner satisfactory to both nations and that the terms of the agreement will not only contribute to the prosperity of both of these great Oriental empires, but maintain that cordial relationship so essential to the future of both and to the peace of the world.

DEMANDS $100,000 OF EMMA TRENTINI

Papers in a suit for absolute divorce were filed yesterday in the Supreme Court by Mrs. Rudolf Friml, wife of a composer of light operas, through Herman Roth, attorney, with offices in the Longacre Building. Simultaneously Mrs. Friml brought suit for $100,000 damages against Emma Trentini, prima donna, alleging the alienation of her husband's affections.

Mr. Roth said the defendants had been served with papers Sunday at midnight upon their return from a motor ride to the Hotel Marseilles, Broadway and One Hundred and Third Street.

Mr. Friml is a Bohemian and came to this country six years ago as accompanist of Jan Kubelik, the violinist. It was while touring with Mr. Kubelik that he met Mrs. Friml, who was a Miss Stern, daughter of a wine merchant of Los Angeles, Cal., said to be wealthy. He gave up his work as an accompanist and remained in Los Angeles.

Arthur Hammerstein heard some of his [illegible] and [illegible] one day and sent for Mr. Friml. Mr. Hammerstein commissioned him to compose the score of an operetta, and "The Firefly" was the result. Miss Trentini was starred in this work, and its success led to the writing of "High Jinks" by Mr. Friml, in which also Miss Trentini was the prima donna.

In the complaints Mrs. Friml charges improper conduct on the part of the defendants since last December in several New York hotels, in the Hotel Statler, Buffalo; the Ritz-Carlton, Philadelphia, and at 600 West One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street, where the Frimls had an apartment.

Until recently, when she retired from the cast, Miss Trentini sang the principal rôle in a current musical comedy. Mrs. Friml is at her father's home in Los Angeles. There are two children, the elder of whom is 5 years old.

BREITUNG GETS HUGE CONTRACT IN PERU

President Benavides Approves His $10,000,000 Irrigation and Colonization Scheme.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LIMA, Peru, May 6.—President Benavides of Peru issued today a supreme decree accepting, with slight modifications, the contract proposed by Breitung & Co., Limited, of New York, for the irrigation and colonization of Peruvian coast lands. The Government will issue bonds to the amount of £2,000,000 sterling, ($10,000,000,) which Edward N. Breitung will negotiate. The bond issue matures in thirty years and the lands are to be sold on twenty-year payments.

Approximately 100,000 acres will be added to the cultivated area of the country. The company has until July 15 to examine and approve the contract and transfer the twenty-thousand-pound guarantee to Lima.

The negotiations for this, the largest transaction in the history of the republic, were conducted by Henry Clay Howard of Kentucky, ex-Minister to Peru.

When the foreging dispatch was read to him at the Hotel St. Regis last night Edward N. Breitung said he was very glad to hear that the contract had been signed by President Benavides, because that official's two predecessors had intended to do it, but were removed from office suddenly.

"The idea of irrigating and colonizing about 90,000 acres of desert lands back from the coast line of Perul, near Callao," he said, "originated with President Leguia about three years ago. He sent a representative to New York to have a plan drawn up. We had a plan made of the work necessary to be done and sent one of our representatives from Chicago, William Roher, to Peru, where he stayed eight months and drew up a contract which Leguia was to sign. Then the revolution came which made Billinghurst the President of the country, and the preliminaries had to be gone over again.

"Just as Billinghurst was ready to sign a contract with our firm he was removed from office and Benavides was elected in his place. Henry Clay Howard has been conoducting the negatiations in Peru, and we expect that he will return with the signed contract in the next two weeks. If it is satisfactory, we will sign it, and the work will begin at once. It will be of the greatest benefit to Peru, as it will put the country on the same footing agriculturally that it enjoyed before its conquest by the Spaniards.

"The idea is to colonize the coast lands with Spanish and Italian farmers who can stand the heat better than those from northern climates. Only a portion of the 90,000 acres will have to be irrigated, as it was all well irrigated lands many years ago. Experiments that have been made show that the land, when restored, will yield abundant crops of tobacco, South Sea cotton, coffee, cocoa and tropical fruits. It will mark the beginning of a new era for the people of Peru."

Mr. Breitung added that after the contract was signed by his firm he intends to make a trip to Peru to look over the land and the plan of the work that was necessary to be done to start the irrigation system.

BARNES WAS PAID BY PRINTER LYON

Books Show Salary Was $10,000—Counsel Will Try to Connect It with Contracts.

COLONEL QUICKLY EXCUSED

"ALBANY VICE" EXCLUDED

Barnes Scores by Decision of Court Limiting Corruption Issue to State Affairs.

Special to The New York Times.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 6.—Out of a bewildering mass of figures and documents counsel for Theodore Roosevelt, who is being sued by William Barnes, Jr., for alleged libel, in the Supreme Court here, produced evidence today tending to show that Mr. Barnes had a close-working arrangement with the so-called Albany printing ring, and that it netted him big profits.

It was shown that before Mr. Barnes became a stockholder of the J. B. Lyon Company, which obtained many contracts for legislative printing, he had been in the pay of James B. Lyon, and had received a salary of $10,000 a year for two years. John M. Bowers, counsel for Mr. Roosevelt, did not bring out the full significance of this bit of evidence, but he laid the foundation for further testimony along the same line. By the introduction of the salary in evidence the Roosevelt counsel expect to prove:

That during the two years ended Sept. 30, 1901, the J. B. Lyon Company got no legislative printing, but that all the contracts went personally to James B. Lyon, who was the head of a separate establishment.

That during these two years Mr. Barnes obtained the printing contracts for James B. Lyon and received $20,000 as salary or commission.

That at the end of the two years James B. Lyon became associated with the J. B. Lyon Company, and that, while Mr. Barnes's salary then ceased, in lieu of it, he received stock in the J. B. Lyon Company, and thereafter continued to obtain State printing contracts for the company.

Salary Evidence a Bomb.

The salary evidence had all the effect of a sudden bomb explosion in the Barnes camp. It was hidden away in the voluminous records of the private accounts of The Albany Journal Company, of which Mr. Barnes is President [illegible] and included the minutes of the Directors' meetings.

Mr. Bowers had been fighting for days to get the books accepted in evidence by the court. The Barnes forces had been fighting just as hard to keep them out on the ground that a stockholder and Director of The Journal Company—such is Mr. Barnes—could not necessarily be held responsible for the acts of the corporation.

Mr. Bowers had an expert accountant go over the records, and when Justice Andrews allowed them in evidence Mr. Bowers brought to light the fact that at a meeting of the Trustees of The Journal Company, held on Feb. 14, 1900, a resolution was passed accepting the offer of Mr. Barnes to assign to the company his salary claim against Mr. Lyon. As the resolution was read to the jury Mr. Barnes shifted uncomfortably in his seat. The resolution follows:

"WHEREAS, William Barnes, Jr., has offered to assign to the Journal Company a claim held by him against James B. Lyon for salary for the two years commencing Oct. 1, 1899, and ending Sept. 30, 1901, amounting to $20,000, in full for all claims of every name, nature and kind whatsoever now held by the said Journal Company against said William Barnes, Jr.; be it

"RESOLVED, that the Journal Company does hereby accept the said assignment and does hereby authorize the Secretary of the said company to accept the said assignment of said salary claim from William Barnes, Jr., and to execute in the name of the said Journal Company a full general release of the said William Barnes, Jr., from all claims of every name, nature and kind now held by the Journal Company against him, and that the acceptance of said assignments shall be in full satisfaction of all claims now existing.

Connecting this testimony with the letter which Mr. Barnes wrote to Colonel Roosevelt in 1899 when the latter was Governor, and in which Mr. Barnes frankly stated that the establishment of a State printing office would "ruin him financially," the Roosevelt counsel believe that their case against Mr. Barnes has been materially strengthened. Having opened the books of the Barnes concern, however, they are not going to stop until every record has been dragged into the light, if possible.

Barnes's Share of Profits.

To show how much Mr. Barnes profited as the majority stockholder of The Journal Company, Mr. Bowers had spread on the record today the amount of dividends the company paid its stockholders during the five years between April, 1908, and April, 1913. Each year a quarterly dividend was declared, making twenty in all. The total dividends amounted to $125,625, and of this amount Mr. Barnes's share was $86,850, leaving $38,775 to be divided among the other stockholders.

While the Roosevelt forces were jubilant over what the day had brought forth for them, William M. Ivins, chief counsel for Barnes, declared after court had adjourned, that in reality it amounted to very little, and that it would all be explained when Mr. Barnes took the stand. Mr. Ivins said:

"The testimony that is being brought out is offered as if it were the last word. As a matter of fact, it is only a single phase of the case from their point of view, without any connection with the libel, and is being admitted by the Judge subject to being stricken out hereafter."

The evidence regarding printing matters took up almost the entire day, and, shrouded in technicalities as it was, proved dry entertainment for the usual court-room crowd. The day started with high expectations, for it was believed that Mr. Ivins would put Colonel Roosevelt through another of his stiff cross-examinations, taking up the conversations the Colonel yesterday testified to having had with Mr. Barnes. Mr. Ivins, however, let the Colonel depart after he had answered a few perfunctory questions put to him by Mr. Bowers.

"Mr. Roosevelt came prepared to make some more speeches to the jury," the Barnes chief counsel explained later. "He had both sleeves filled up to the shoulders, but I decided not to give him a chance. I guess I rather disappointed him."

Throughout the day the Colonel seemed to take little interest in the proceedings. He read a magazine most of the time, and occasionally conferred with his counsel.

It was plainly an unhappy day for Mr. Barnes. He seemingly did not relish having the most intimate dealings of his

AMALGAMATED CO. SEEKS TO DISSOLVE

Directors Ask Shareholders to Wind Up $155,000,000 Copper Corporation.

OWNS ALL ANACONDA STOCK

And Business Can Be Carried On Better Under Montana Laws Than in New Jersey.

Directors of the Amalgamated Copper Company, which controls through stock ownership the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, and until recently held extensive mining properties, will ask stockholders at the annual meeting in June to dissolve the company. The reason, as outlined in a letter sent to shareholders by President John D. Ryan yesterday, is that the restrictive effects of the "Seven Sisters" laws in New Jersey, where the Amalgamated was incorporated, are such that the Directors think it best to wind up the company's affairs.

The Directors propose to distribute to the holders of Amalgamated shares two shares of Anaconda stock from the treasury to each share of Amalgamated and about $3 in cash. The cash will result, the letter states, from the sale of a sufficient amount of the Anaconda stock to bring the total held by the Amalgamated down to a figure which will admit of the distribution evenly. This will necessitate the sale of 250,179 Anaconda shares, and owners of Amalgamated stock of record May 17 will be permitted to subscribe for this stock at par on the basis of one share of Anaconda to each block of six shares of Amalgamated.

It is possible, the letter states, that when the time comes for dissolving the company, the distribution may be made share for share, as Anaconda stockholders are scheduled to hold a meeting on May 19 to act on a proposal to change the parity of their stock from $25 to $50 a share. This step, if taken, will not alter the Anaconda's capitalisation, but will divide the number of authorized shares in half.

[illegible] Company was organized in 1899. In 1901 the authorized capital stock was increased from $75,000,000 to $155,000,000, of which $153,887,900 was afterward issued all told. From time to time investments were made in stocks of other copper-producing concerns out of accumulated earnings.

"It was the declared policy at the time of the organization of the company," says President Ryan, "and that policy has been adhered to ever since, that such investments should be made as favorable opportunity offered, so that there should be no impairment of the value of the company's holdings on account of the depletion of mines of companies whose stocks this company held. The right to add to the investments of the company by the acquisition of stocks other than those already held was repealed by the Legislature of New Jersey in 1913, and although an amendatory act has been recently passed permitting New Jersey corporations to acquire the stocks of other companies for investment only, the right of this company to continue its policy and maintain the value of its stocks under the New Jersey laws is so doubtful and restrictive that the Directors do not feel at liberty to carry out that policy."

The letter recites that in 1910, when the Anaconda Company increased its authorized capital to $150,000,000, it sold stock and bought with the proceeds the physical properties and assets of the concerns in Montana whose stock control had been in the treasury of the Amalgamated. Wyoming properties were also acquired by the Anaconda at about the same time, and in 1914 the company paid the Amalgamated $30,000 shares of its stock and $9,059,888 for the International Smelting and Refining Company.

Assets—Cash and Anaconda.

Other important investments taken over from the Amalgamated in March of this year were the entire capital stock of the United Metals Selling Company, bought through the sale of $12,500,000 per cent. two-year notes; 150,000 shares of the Inspiration Consolidated Copper Company, 30,800 shares of the Greene-Cananea Copper Company, and stock of less important companies. A cash payment of $4,769,900 was made by the Anaconda for these purchases exclusive of the Metals Selling Company, and after the transactions were completed the Amalgamated was left with no assets except its Anaconda shares and cash. Its total holdings of Anaconda stock was 3,327,937 shares.

The Amalgamated shareholders will be benefited by the dissolution, says the letter, through a saving in taxes. With the Amalgamated holding only Anaconda stock and merely receiving and distributing dividends therefrom, the double taxes would amount, on the basis of the average earnings for the past three years, to more than $100,000, which, it is stated, in addition to the cost of the organization, can be saved. The Anaconda Company was incorporated in Montana. The letter states that it is better able to seek new opportunities for mining investments than could the parent concern.

The annual meeting of shareholders will take place on June 7, and the Directors will urge that final steps be taken then. The decision of the board to recommend dissolution did not come exactly as a surprise to stockholders, as the plan was known to be under consideration.

PAYING CITY TAXES EARLY.

Receipts So Far $3,515,809 Greater Than to Same Date Last Year.

The collection of this year's city taxes has begun very well. In the first four working days of May payments have amounted, less discount, to $18,033,545.59, or $3,515,809.90 more than in the first four working days of last year.

The money collected represents so far $10,161,284.24 on the first half year's taxes and $7,872,261.35 on the second half year. The money paid in equals 11.29 per cent. of the entire levy for the year, as compared with 9.73 per cent. of the levy for 1914 paid in the first four days of last May.

RIVAL SUES DUVEENS ASKS FOR $575,000

DENIED HE WAS AN EXPERT

Henry J. and Joseph J. Duveen of Duveen Brothers, dealers in works of art and antiques, were sued yesterday in the Supreme Court for $575,000 damages by Edgar Gorer, also a dealer in antiques. There are two suits—one against each of the defendants. One, for $500,000, is against Joseph J. Duveen, and comprises six causes of action. Mr. Gorer describes himself as a resident of London, with a long experience in the purchase and sale of rare and valuable articles, with an office at 170 New Bond Street, London, and another one at 560 Fifth Avenue in this city. He says that for eleven years he has dealt "particularly in old Chinese porcelains."

He describes Joseph J. Duveen as a British subject, and says that the Messrs. Duveen have stores in London and Paris as well as in this city. Recently the defendants bought the Morgan collection of porcelains for $3,900,000, and they were the agents through whom Henry C. Frick bought the Fragonard panels out of the Morgan collection for $1,425,000. Mr. Gorer bases his complaint against the Duveens on statements he accuses them of making, and which, he says, practically destroyed his trade with Mr. Frick and other rich men.

Said Vase Was Not Antique.

Mr. Gorer says in his complaint against Joseph J. Duveen that in February last he endeavored to sell to Mr. Frick a "rare, unusual, and valuable antique Chinese vase or beaker of the Kang Hsi period" and that the defendant in the presence of Mr. Frick and of the latter's wife, Mrs. Adelaide H. Frick, said:

"That vase is not a genuine [illegible] does not belong to the Kang Hsi period, but has been manufactured within the last seven years, and is an imitation of the genuine article, and is spurious. Gorer has been imposed upon."

The plaintiff says that in making this and similar statements the defendant meant that he was not a connoisseur, that he did not understand his business, and that the statement would tend to injure him in his business affiliations and among his friends. He says that the criticism of him made it appear that he was ignorant of Chinese porcelains, and that the statement was false. On another occasion, in the same month, he says that he sent to the home of Mr. Frick, at Fifth Avenue and Seventieth Street, a vase for inspection, and that Mr. Frick refused to buy it because of the previous criticism of him by the defendant. Mr. Gorer says that he "has been deprived of the custom of Mr. Frick and of his profits which he would have made by the sale of the vase."

He also accuses the defendant of saying in the presence of Carmen Messmore and MacDermid Parish-Watson:

Denied Gorer Was an Expert.

"Gorer knows nothing about porcelains. The real judges are ourselves, my Uncle Henry and me, and we intend stopping Gorer putting these fakes on the market."

A similar statement, Mr. Gorer says, was made by the defendant in the hearing of a prominent merchant, and that he also said to Carmen Messmore and to several of his associates that "Gorer does not understand his business and I and Uncle Henry are going to stop him from bringing fakes over to this country."

Mr. Gorer says he had, and still has, two rare and valuable Chinese porcelain figures of the God Vajrapani of the Ming period, and of which the defendant said to Messmore:

"The two figures you had on exhibition in your Paris place last Summer are modern, and I will bet any one $10,000 to $100 that they are not over fifteen years old. Gorer is no judge of porcelains and in fact has only been in business eight years."

Mr. Gorer's suit against Henry J. Duveen for $75,000 is based on the single allegation that the defendant said during a conversation with some friends prior to January, 1914:

COLONEL DENIES PARIS TALE

Says He Gave No Talk to Temps Man—Recalls Wilson "Interview."

SYRACUSE, May 6.—An alleged interview with Theodore Roosevelt, printed in the Paris Temps today, was denied by him tonight. Colonel Roosevelt said he had made no statement on the war that had not been printed in magazine articles or books written by him.

Gabriel Alphaud, who claims to have interviewed Colonel Roosevelt, recently printed in the Temps what purported to be an interview with President Wilson, which the President promptly denied having given to him.

Interview Roosevelt Denies.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 6.—The Temp's American correspondent describes a visit to Colonel Roosevelt at Oyster Bay. He says the ex-President declared, "I would have protested if I had been President against the violation of Belgium with the utmost energy. To guarantee Belgian neutrality would have saved the United States to take a place in the combat beside the Allies. Perhaps that would have prevented the war. Even on Aug. 5 under the walls of Liege, the Germans had time for reflection. United States has, on the contrary, failed in morality. It would have saved Belgium. America had signed international agreements of 1907 and 1909 at The Hague, which formally guaranteed the inviolability of neutral territories. America had only to do its duty, but preferred to shirk it. Our pacifists have invented a formula, and hence the most just and most criminal of those which have lately deceived the people. They say 'peace by right.' We should say 'peace or war by right.' Peace if just; war if it is just. That is the truth."

German Armies Operating on a Scale Unparalleled in the History of War

LONDON, May 6.—The Germans, in consort with their Austrian allies, are putting forth an effort, the extent of which has never been approached in the history of war. Throughout virtually the whole length of the eastern front they are engaged with the Russians, while in the west, in addition to their attacks around Ypres, they are on the offensive at many points. At other points they are being attacked by the French, British, and Belgians.

Far up in the Russian Baltic Provinces, heretofore untouched by the war, the Germans are attempting to advance toward Libau and Riga. On the East Prussian frontier they are engaged in a series of battles, and with a big gun are bombarding at long range, as they did Dunkirk, the Russian fortress of Grodno. In Central Poland they have had to defend themselves against a Russian attack. In Western Galicia they are attacking with all their strength the Russian flank and compelling the Russians to abandon the Carpathian passes which were gained at such cost during the Winter.

GERMAN GAINS NORTH AND SOUTH

2,000 FRENCH CAPTURED

Result of Wednesday's Loss of Ailly Trenches—French Deny the German Claims.

LONDON, May 6.—Several successes along the western front are recorded in today's official German statements. Berlin reports that the Kaiser's forces have made progress southeast of Ypres, but makes no mention of the recapture by the British of more of the trenches [illegible] Hill 60, as claimed by Sir John French, who says that no German attacks occurred elsewhere on his front.)

Other German claims relate to successes in the Woevre, where the Berlin War Office reports that in an attack along the northern side of the St. Mihiel wedge the Germans took upward of 2,000 prisoners, and that they repulsed French attacks on the southern section of the wedge near Flirey. This, as usual during the last few weeks, disagrees with the French account of the actions, although the Paris communiqué admits that the positions lost in the forest of Ailly, near St. Mihiel, have not all been retaken, and that in Alsace the Germans have recaptured a position at Mameion.

Germans Take Two Farms.

Following is the Berlin official report:

Over the whole front artillery duels have taken place. We made further progress near Ypres (Belgium) and have taken the van Helpe farm and another farm near the Messines-Ypres Railway. We made 100 prisoners and took fifteen machine guns.

In the forest district to the west of Combres we made an advance and captured four French officers and 135 men. We also took four machine guns and a mine-thrower.

In our attack yesterday in the Ailly Wood we achieved our objective by forcing the enemy to evacuate his positions. More than 1,000 Frenchmen, among them 21 officers, were made prisoners. We also took two cannon and several machine guns and mine-throwers. The number of Frenchmen killed was extremely large.

The enemy attacked us in the region north of Flirey and near Croix des Carmes. North of the former place the enemy pushed forward as far as our trenches. At one point in this sector fighting continues. At all other points the French were beaten back. In the Vosges an advance against our position north of Steinbrück was repulsed.

Winning Back Hill 60 Trenches.

The British War Office tonight issued the following communication:

There is nothing to report on the British front except the recapture by us yesterday evening of more of our lost trenches on Hill 60, southeast of Ypres, and that fighting still continues in that locality.

Elsewhere the enemy has shown no disposition to attack.

The French War Office this afternoon gave out a report on the progress of hostilities, reading as follows:

To the north of Ypres we repulsed with facility a night attack made by the Germans from Steenstraete.

To the south of Ypres, the Germans yesterday, at a point near Zwartelan, attacked the trenches of Hill No. 60, occupied last month by British troops. Their very violent onslaught, during the course of which they again made use of asphyxiating gases, made them masters in the beginning of this position, but our allies subsequently delivered a counter-attack and recaptured a portion of the trenches previously lost.

In the Forest Ailly the counter-attack delivered by us toward the end of the day made slight progress, and we recaptured a portion of the position where the German had succeeded in gaining a footing in the morning. During the night the Germans delivered a counter-attack against our position at Mamelon, to the east of Sillakerwasen, the summit of which they reoccupied. All the remainder of our gain in the direction of the River Fecht has been consolidated and maintained.

"Today was calm. There is nothing to report," was the Paris night bulletin.

BRITISH CHAGRINED AT ALLIES' CHECKS

Gas Surprise Not Held Sufficient to Explain Reverse Near Ypres.

ITS IMPORTANCE ADMITTED

German Victory There Would Be a Second Fall of Antwerp, J. L. Garvin Says.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 6.—It is unquestionable that British expectations have been grievously disappointed by the developments of the war since the partial success at Neuve Chapelle, and particularly by the reports to hand from both [illegible] The public generally had been led to believe that the month of May would be marked by an allied offensive movement on a grand scale. The multitudinous reports and rumors purporting to give definite details of the British preparations, the dispatching of troops, &c.," which have circulated from mouth to mouth, have been even more largely responsible for these high hopes than the predictions of optimistic newspapers, or even the prognostications indulged in by the official eye-witness, whose inveterate habit of looking only on the brightest aspect of the campaign has frequently been the subject of severe criticism.

Disappointed, Not Discouraged.

While it is true that disappointment prevails, it would be false to assert that there is any deep-seated discouragement. The struggle around Ypres and Hill 60 appears to the British public in the light of a test action. It is asked particularly how it comes about that that line cannot be held now when much greater forces are available. The factor of surprise by the German use of asphyxiating gases is not thought to be an adequate explanation, particularly as both the Belgian military authorities and the British Headquarters Staff were aware of their preparation over a month ago. This was shown by the official Belgian communique issued yesterday, and by The Associated Press, correspondent's report in American papers in the middle of April.

"The announcement that the Germans have recovered a footing on Hill 60," says J. L. Garvin in The Pall Mall Gazette, "is disturbing, and contrasts with the tone of the previous British bulletin. It is folly to say that Ypres has more political than military importance. The Germans would be more encouraged by success at Ypres than anything since the fall of Antwerp. If such an event occurs we must instantly recognise it and admit it as a grave defeat. In place of a party Cabinet a national Ministry ought then to be formed and a new military levy made."

Mr. Garvin disagrees with the view held in some quarters that the German attacks in Flanders are likely to lead to a German march on Dunkirk and Calais. "Successive defensive lines would have to be forced," he says. "It is almost a fortnight since the poison coup. At that rate it would take the enemy about a year to reach the Straits of Dover."

The view which finds most favor with the British press generally is that German Headquarters is exaggerating its claims of victories with a view to influencing neutrals and discouraging the Allies. (It may be remarked parenthetically that reports of immediate action by Italy seem to be restricted to the newspapers.)

German Claims and Wavering Neutrals.

Referring to the German claims, The Westminster Gazette says:

"We have only to look to Rome, Bucharest, and Athens to see what is at stake, what is the hour for the German cause, and why extravagant claims of victory are made in the official communiqués. For that very reason it is folly on our side to take these German claims at their face value, to give them the loud advertisement which the enemy most desires, and generally to produce the impression that we are in a state of alarm and agitation. That is the impression he wishes above all things to produce among the neutral nations at this moment; and we play straight into his hands if we help him in this effort.

The claim made in today's German wireless dispatches of the capture of Gorlice and the Russian withdrawal from Jaslo is admitted to place the situation on the eastern front in a more unfavorable light than British observers were at first willing to admit. The Manchester Guardian, for instance, today deduced that Germany was trying to make much more out of the victories in the Carpathians than they were worth, adding: "That's very definitely

VIENNA, May 6, (via London, May 7.)—The victorious advance of the Austro-German armies in West Galicia continues. The northern wing has captured Tarnow. The southern wing has crossed the Wisloka River and the Russians are retreating eastward of the Lupkow Pass. An official communication issued late this evening by the War Office says:

At 4 o'clock this afternoon the last Russian positions on the heights east of the Dunajec and the Biala Rivers were gained by our troops.

Tarnow was captured by us at 10 o'clock this morning.

The strategic achivement of rolling up a hostile battle front by a flanking attack, of which Chancellorsville is one example in modern history, is now in full progress in West Galicia. Favored by continued good weather, mile after mile of the Russian Carpathian front has been rendered untenable by the steady, unchecked Austro-German advance.

The Russian forces have been in full retreat since dawn of May 5, and are being closely followed by the Austrian Carpathian army, according to official advices reaching here. More than 50,000 prisoners have already been captured by the Austrians in West Galicia.

Think Russians Can't Escape.

Field Marshal von Hoetzendorf's plan is working out with precise regularity with respect to this section of the front. Confidence is expressed by headquarters that the principal portion of the Russian army under General Radko Dimitrieff, which is attempting to defend positions in the Carpathians to the west of Lupkow Pass, cannot make good its retreat. Detachments of this army may work their way out, but it is declared that the bulk of the army, with the heavy artillery and baggage, can scarcely succeed in avoiding capture, in view of Field Marshal von Hoetzendorf's rapid advance through the Gorlice breach in the lines.

On the northern front the Russians held on desperately to Tarnow and Wal Mountain—a fortified crest 1,500 to 2,000 feet high between the Biala and Dunajec Rivers—to enable them to get great quantities of stores accumulated behind Tarnow away and cover the retirement of the armies to the southward. The Russians fortified this mountain until it was a veritable Gibraltar, but the Archduke's men attacked it with a desperate valor and were well served by their artillery. This struggle may go down in history with that for Pultoff Hill, to the south of Mukden, in the Russo-Japanese war.

The question as to whether the Russians can make a successful stand on the line of the Wisloka River is the important one from the Austro-German military viewpoint. If they cannot, the breach in the Russian line is considered complete, and the situation for the Russian Carpathian armies will undoubtedly be critical.

Great Mortar Fire Overpowering.

The heaviest artillery was employed in these operations. The 42-centimetre mortars in action were, however, not the noted German guns, but of Austrian make. They were designed originally for coast defense purposes, but have been found exceedingly valuable for land warfare. They fire projectiles 880 pounds heavier than the German mortar and are understood to be comparatively mobile and quickly set up. The effect of these mortars during the artillery preparations for battle is described as overpowering. Shells from them have reached the supply depots behind Tarnow.

The Austrians are also equipped with highly effective smaller howitzers of a new type, which were put into the field during the later stage of the war.

The fighting is taking place in the difficult country of mountain spurs and foothills of the Northern Carpathians, and the successes of the Germans and Austrians are not being won without the hardest efforts. All hills and bridges in the rear of the original Russian lines had been fortified with triple rows of trenches, in preparation for such an emergency, and the Russians, with all the advantages of prepared trenches and good positions, are putting up a stubborn resistence.

Many unverifiable rumors concerning the number of prisoners taken by the Austrians are in circulation. Some report, say that the total number of prisoners reached between 100,000 and 150,000 today and yesterday, but the authorities themselves warn against credence being placed in any particular set of figures. Probably they themselves do not know within thousands how many Russians have been taken prisoners.

Forces of the Teuton allies are advancing successfully along the entire front in West Galicia. Troops of the enemy, still intact, are attempting, by taking up favorable defensive positions, to cover their hasty retreat.

The strong Russian forces in the Beskid region are being seriously menaced by the flank attack of our victorious armies. Already we have forced the fighting in the regions of Jasio and Dukla, and the engagement now in progress will complete the annihilation of the Third Russian army.

The number of prisoners in our hands has been increased to more than 50,000.

On the remainder of the front the situation remains unchanged.

In the Orova Valley a strong Russian attack on the hill of Ostry has been repulsed with great slaughter of the enemy.

Berlin Cheered by Victories.

BERLIN, May 6, (via London.)—The military developments of the last week have had a visible effect on popular feeling in Berlin, which is decidedly more optimistic. Operations in the Russian province of Courland, on the Baltic; in Galicia, and in Belgium indicate that German forces are taking the offensive on a large scale, and that greater events are to be expected.

Further developments in Galicia are awaited with breathless interest, as it is believed that the events on this section of the front may give a decisive turn to the entire Eastern campaign. The view held here is that the whole Russian position in the Carpathians has now become precarious.

The operations of the Austro-German force which is now threatening the Russian lines between the Dunajec and Biala Rivers is regarded as a first-class performance, from a German military standpoint, particularly as it is the result of a frontal attack against strongly fortified positions.

The Austrians crossed the Dunajec near its confluence with the Vistula, although the Russians were strongly protected behind a dike on the eastern bank.

The Austrians, behind a dike on the west shore, advanced pontoons by night, cutting through the dike and depositing the pontoons among high reeds along the shore. They refilled and resodded the cut each night. In this way a sufficient number of pontoons was concealed in three nights for effecting a crossing of the river. When these preparations had been completed a terrific artillery bombardment enabled the Austrians to bridge the stream with comparatively little loss.

The Austro-German attack near Gorlice is described as an unparalleled artillery performance. The Russians believed their position to be absolutely impregnable. The artillery of the allies, from 42 centimeters down, so completely overwhelmed the Russians, however, that the Austro-German infantry was able to take the opposing positions at the first rush.

Attack on the Nida a Blind.

These operations were veiled by a heavy bombardment of the Russian positions along the Nida River last week, the Germans and Austrians meanwhile bringing up a powerful force, including an enormous amount of artillery, to the Dunajec for the great push eastward toward Lemberg.

The Russians still hold one strong position on a range of hills, more than 1,000 feet high, near Tuchow, but this position is now threatened from both the north and south. Artillery is already preparing the ground for an attempt by infantry to dislodge the Russians.

In view of this situation it is generally believed in Berlin that the operations in Galicia during the next ten days will yield big results.

The War Office report of the latest operations there follows:

In the war area to the east of Tarnow and to the north of that place as far as the Vistula River, and on the right bank of the Dunajec River, fighting continued far into the night. The number of prisoners so far taken has reached to more than 40,000. It is worthy to note that this is the Russian front.

In the Beskid Mountains, on the Lupkow Pass Road, an attack is being made by the forces under General of Cavalry Von der Marwitz simultaneously with an attack made by the Austro-Hungarian army which is co-operating with the Germans. These attacks are progressing favorably.

The bulletin concludes: "We not only forced a crossing of the Wisloka at several points, but firmly put our hands on the Dukla Pass, the road and the place."

NO AUSTRIAN VICTORY RUSSIA DECLARES

Foreign Minister Sazanoff Issues Categorical Denial Through Washington Embassy.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—The Russian Embassy today received the following dispatch from the Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs:

PETROGRAD, May 5, 1915.

The reports from Berlin and Vienna of a victory gained by the Germans and Austrians in Western Galicia are absolutely unfounded. The battle that are proceeding now in that region give no foundation whatever to talk even of a partial success of our enemies. You are asked to contradict most emphatically the reports spread by the Germans.

(Signed) SAZANOFF.

In Galicia, the battle between the Vistula and the Carpathians was continued yesterday with great obstinacy. Covered by heavy artillery fire the enemy continued to concentrate forces on the right bank of the Dunajec. The enemy's main efforts were directed toward Biecz and Jaslo.

Our troops were severely tried, owing to the superiority of the enemy's heavy artillery; but the enemy also suffered heavily under our shrapnel and rifle fire when he attempted to attack.

In the direction of Stryi during Tuesday we developed our success on positions on Mount Makouwka. The number of prisoners we made in this action amounts to 2,000 men, including 40 officers. The retreating enemy was thrown back a considerable distance.

Along the course of the Upper Lomnia we also gained some successes yesterday morning.

TO ATTACK BALTIC PORTS.

Germans Plan to Capture Libau and Riga as Bases.

BERLIN, May 6, (via London.)—It is understood in well-informed quarters that the German troops in Courland are now nearing the Port of Libau, which probably will be attacked by land and sea. Field Marshal von Hindenburg himself is in command there. His design appears to be to take Libau, and probably Rige as well, and use these ports as bases for harassing Russian communications with Petrograd.

The Russians already have sent from Kovno reinforcements for resisting these operations, the results of which must soon be apparent.

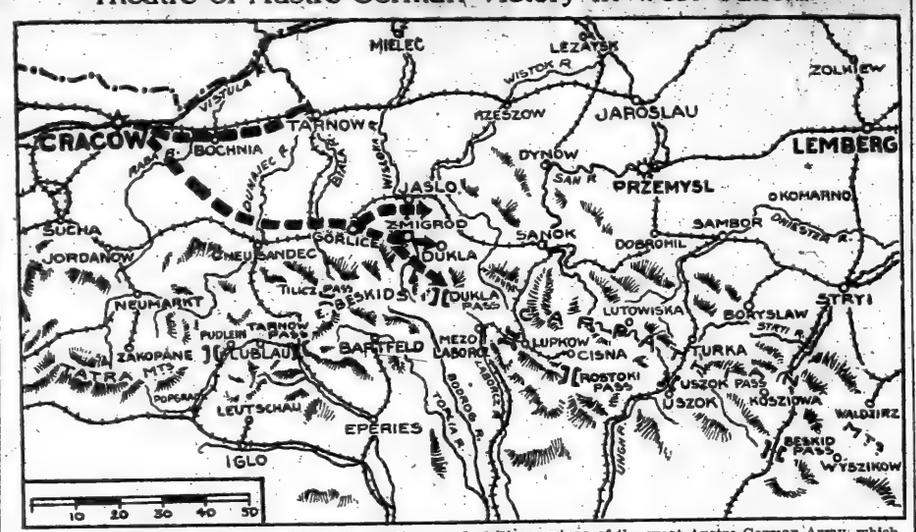
Theatre of Austro-German Victory in West Galicia



It is announced from Vienna that both the northern and southern wings of the great Austro-German Army, which was concentrated at Cracow, is succeeding in its task of rolling up the battle front of the Russians in Western Galicia. The heavy dotted lines on the map show the advance of the Austro-German Army.

The northern wing, after forcing the passage of the Dunajec River, and storming Wal Mountain, is reported to have captured Tarnow, the great Russian base in that region.

The southern wing, according to Vienna and Berlin reports, has crossed the Rivers Dunajec, Biala and Wisloka, captured the towns of Gorlice, Jasio and Dukla, and the head of the Dukla Pass, and forced the Russians to retreat far eastward beyond the Lupkow Pass.

This means, in the opinion of military critics the collapse for the time being at least, of the entire Russian campaign in the Western Capathians, and, in the view of military circles in Vienna, the probable capture of the bulk of the Czar's Army which has been operating in Western Galicia and through the Cartpathians in the foothills on the Hungarian side of the range.

Northeast and southwest of Kalwarya our positions were attacked several times yesterday by strong Russian forces. All these attacks failed with very heavy losses to the enemy.

The enemy advanced against our bridge heads on the Pilica River without success.

Bombs were dropped on the fortified town of Grodno during last night.

PETROGRAD, May 6.—The following official communication was issued today:

An engagement took place yesterday near Libau (on the Baltic) with a German torpedo boat.

There were skirmishes, which resulted favorably for us, south of Mitau (Courland) and near the village of Besiagola.

On the right bank of the Orzica on the evening of the 4th we repulsed an impetuous attack by the Germans, which had been prepared for by a fierce fire lasting an hour and a half. We inflicted heavy losses on the enemy.

East of the Mlawa Railway we succeeded, by a surprise attack, in the capture of the farm of Pomiczyn. Yesterday the enemy made incessant, but abortive, counter-attacks lasting six hours. In front of the farm, which still remains in our hands, the Germans left about a thousand dead.

All is quiet on the left bank of the Vistula.

ANSWERS ODENWALD NOTE.

State Department Tells Germany Steamer Disregarded Warning.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—The State Department has replied to the German Ambassador's complaint that the German steamer Odenwald was "attacked" when she attempted to leave San Juan, Porto Rico, without clearance papers.

The reply was not made public, but it is understood to be confined almost entirely to reports of the military and port authorities, telling how the Odenwald was warned not to leave port, and how when she did start out she was brought to by two blank shots, and fginally a solid shot fired across her bow.

HOME FOR WAR BABIES.

British Suffragists Plan to Adopt and Rear 50 Infants.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Friday, May 7.—The Daily Chronicle says that while politicians and social reformers are inquiring into the mater of war babies, the Women's Social and Political Union is taking action. Mrs. Pankhurst told a Daily Chronicle representative yesterday:

"We mean to adopt fifty war babies and to take care of them until they are grown up enough to earn their own living. The only cases to be dealt with will be those in which it is impossible for the mother and child to be together.

"It isn't necessary to know how many war babies there will be," said Mrs. Pankhurst. "We know there will be many, and we want to bring some of them up in a home that will serve as a model to other social workers. The W. S. P. U. Children's Home will be looked after by a staff of efficient nurses, and a woman doctor will reside in the house. The experiment will be limited to girls."

ing to the success of the new method of "frightfulness" adopted by the Germans in poisoning the air, the salient has become perilously narrow, and it would cause little surprise, though much regret, if it were found necessary to sacrifice it and readjust the line west of the town.

reithkopf, where guns of the enemy were captured.

"To sum up: During the last fifteen days the enemy has attempted a heavy offensive, which we speedily broke down. The total of the German losses on the heights of the Meuse, in the Woevre and the Vosges has been more than 35,000. At no part have they broken through our line. They have taken no important position from us. They have allowed half a dozen of their finest regiments to be decimated."

An official communication issued by the Belgian headquarters at Havre says:

The enemy's artillery has bombarded intermittently Ramscapelle, Oude Stuyvekenskerke, and territory beyond the Yser, to the north and south of Dixmude, and also the outskirts of Oostkerke and Reninghe.

FRENCH DENY GERMAN CLAIMS OF VICTORIES

Official Note Says the Foe Has Lost 35,000 in Two Weeks.

PARIS, May 6.—An official note issued to-night says:

"The German General Staff persists in giving false details concerning their offensive engagements. During the last fifteen days the enemy has suffered complete checks and severe losses.

"The German attack on April 22 by two army corps using asphyxiating gas bombs had as its object the piercing of the Ypres front. The greater portion of the prisoners captured from us were overcome by fumes. We suffered no check. The rapidity of our counter attacks prevented the enemy from attaining the left bank of the Yser Canal, and from establishing a strong position on the right bank.

"In these combats we inflicted heavy losses on the enemy. Our actual front was established only two kilometers (about a mile and a quarter) behind the original front. Our men are now provided with means to protect them against similar attacks with asphyxiating bombs.

"Being unable to pierce our lines and compel us to give up possession of Ypres the Germans used a marine gun, firing a distance of 38 kilometers (about 23½ miles) on Dunkirk. This gun, which ceased firing after two days, did damage of no military importance.

"On April 23 the Germans endeavored to retake Les Eparges with three divisions. Heavy fighting occurred in the neighborhood of St. Rémy and Calonne and on Les Eparges heights, but the Germans were repulsed by counter attacks. The number of losses was shown by great heaps of bodies. It may be said that the three divisions were completely decimated.

"Important progress has been made by the Allies in the Bois Le Prêtre, the Bois d'Ailly, and Bois de Montmare. On April 26 the Germans attacked and captured the summit of Hartmannsweilerkopf, but their success was brief. We retook the summit the following day, forcing the enemy a distance of 200 meters beyond the crest. We also made progress in the region of Schnepfen-

Paul Leroy-Beaulieu Hopes It May Soon Reach the Million Figure.

PARIS, Friday, May 7, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—An interesting calculation of the approximate strength of the British forces in France appears in the Economiste Français from the pen of Paul Leroy-Beaulieu, the famous economist and statesman.

He takes Mr. Lloyd George's statement that the British forces now abroad are equivalent to thirty-six divisions. "Some French newspapers," he says, "have supposed that a British division numbers 20,000 men, and that in consequence the total in question is 720,000 men. This figure is, in my opinion, exaggerated, and it would be nearer the truth to give 15,000 men with a division, the more so as this figure fits in with the declaration of Lord Kitchener, who spoke of an average of 30,000 men being sent each week across to the Continent. At 15,000 men a division we may reckon, then, that thirty-six English divisions in France and Belgium number about 540,000. By far the greater part of these are not at the front.

"The French Communiqué of April 26 measures the western front at 950 kilometers, (about 590 miles.) Any calculation of this kind is difficult, for the front consists of a very irregular line, full of salients and re-entrants. Supposing instead of 950 kilometers a total front of 800 kilometers, (496 miles.) The British troops would not seem to occupy appreciably more than 60 kilometers. From this we are entitled to conclude that if the British effectives in France have risen to 550,000 or 660,000 men—still more, if they have reached a higher figure—about two-thirds of them must needs be still in the second line or in camps.

"Nevertheless, our allies' troops are growing continually in numbers. The British Government, in order to facilitate the transport of troops, suspended a short time ago the regular shipping services between England and Holland. We may hope more and more that the British forces that are co-operating with our troops will attain the effective, so often indicated, of a million of men, and that that strength will be kept up."

TRULY WARNER.

URGE THAT BRITISH USE POISON GAS TOO

Editor and Member of Parliament Demand Reprisals on Germany.

MOST VICTIMS SUCCUMB

Death Is Slow Torture by Suffocation, Says an Officer Who Has Watched It.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Friday, May 7.—The Cabinet is now considering the question whether the Allies should employ poison gases against the Germans, according to The Daily Chronicle, which editorially argues that "it is clear from all the evidence that the German asphyxiating gases possess serious military importance, and the enemy will continue to use them, probably on a growing scale, whenever conditions are favorable. A new and formidable weapon has been introduced into warfare, and, much as we may regret its introduction and censure the gross breach of international faith by which it was introduced, neither regrets nor censure will win battles.

"Unless our troops are to feel that they fight an unfair battle, with one hand tied behind their backs—and that is a feeling which, if justified, might destroy all the morale of even the bravest soldiers—we must fight gases with gases, and do so with the least possible delay. We must arm our front with equipment at least as deadly as the German gas equipment, and, if possible, deadlier. This is not a matter to stand arguing about, posing pros and cons, whether in Parliament or elsewhere. In justice to our rown soldiers we need to act, and act promptly; and at the same time threreought to be as rapid a development as possible of defensive measures, not merely for the wearing of respirations, but of the spraying of alcohol, ammonia, and other chemical agents.

"Every humane person must deplore that warfare has entered on this new phase, but we cannot prevent its having entered on; all we can do is to see that our men are not put at a relative disadvantage by it. If normal weather returns, with the normal preponderance of southwest winds, the enemy may come to be sorry for their own barbarous innovation, but we cannot prevent the Allies are compelled to copy it will not in any sense exonerate Germany for having introduced it, nor take the crime of having introduced it out of the category of those things for which an account must be duly exacted at the end of the war."

Slow Torture, Says An Officer.

The Chronicle prints a letter from a British officer who visited in hospital some of the men who were disabled by gas on Hill 60.

"The whole of England and the civilized world," he says, "ought to have the truth fully brought before them in vivid detail, and not wrapped up as at present. When we got to the hospital we had no difficulty in finding out in which ward the men were, as the noise of the poor devils trying to get breath was sufficient to direct us.

"There were about twenty of the worst cases in the ward, on mattresses, all more or less in a sitting position, propped up against the walls. Their faces, arms and hands were of a shiny, gray-black color. With their mouths open and leaden-glazed eyes, all were swaying slightly backward and forward, trying to get breath. It was a most appalling sight—all these poor, black faces struggling for life—what with the groaning and the noise of the efforts for breath.

"There is practically nothing to be done for them except to give them salt and water to try to make them sick. The effect the gas has is to fill the lungs with watery, frothy matter, which gradually increases and rises till it fills up the whole lungs and comes up to the mouth; then they die. It is suffocation, slow drowning, taking in some cases one or two days. Eight died last night out of twenty I saw, and most of the others I saw will die, while those who get over the gas invariably develop acute pneumonia.

"It is without doubt the most awful form of scientific torture. Not one of the men I saw in the hospital had a scratch or wound. The Germans have given out that it is a rapid, painless death—the liars! No torture could be worse than to give them a dose of their own gas."

WAR PREPARATIONS HURRIED BY ITALY

Carabineers and Customs Men Called to Colors and All Furloughs Stopped.

ARMY MASSED AT BRINDISI

Special Defense Measures to Protect Venice and Its Art Treasures —German Press Pessimistic.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, May 6.—The diplomatic situation here seems unchanged, but one regulation after another is being issued, showing that war preparations are being carried out continually.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONTIER, May 5, via Paris, May 6.—At the same time that the negotiations between Italy and Austria are being continued, Italy's military preparations are being completed with as much energy as though the country expected to participate in war tomorrow.

All the Carabineers and the customs guards, who in Italy are attached to the army, have been called to the colors, and all military leaves of absence have been supressed.

The frontier of Italy on the Austrian side has been strongly fortified. All the passes are protected with intrenchments and wire entanglements. Concrete has been used in a number of places in the erection of barricades for the protection of the soldiers.

Special measures have been adopted for the defense of Venice and the art treasures in this city. The naval authorities are of the opin'on that long-range guns of large calibre are sufficient to prevent any hostile fleet from bombarding the city, but attack from aeroplanes is feared. To afford protection against the onslaughts of aviators anti-airship guns have been set up at several points around the city, and it is believed they will suffice to protect Venice from assault from above.

In addition to the troops concentrated on the Austrian frontier, another Italian army has been brought together in the vicinity of Brindisi, on the Adriatic. This concentration is interpreted as a sign that Italy foresees the possibility of action in the Near East.

The Italian Government is also taking all measures possible in a diplomatic way in expectation of a possible outbreak of war.

Foreign Minister Sonnino has prepared a long statement for publication the moment Italy joins the Allies in case she decides upon this action. This statement is designed to justify Italy's action before the world. It sets forth the historical, racial, economic, and strategical reasons influencing the nation and dwells upon the "intolerable position" of Italy in the Adriatic and on her eastern frontier.

Riccardo Bollati, Italian Ambassador at Berlin and an intimate friend of Herr von Jagow, the German Foreign Minister, since the time they were both in Rome, has been bending every effort to preserve the neutrality of Italy. Duke d'Avarna, Italian Ambassador at Vienna, has been working in the same direction. He has been accused by Italians of having become Austrian in his sympathies, so ineffectively has he endeavored to bring about an Austro-Italian agreement.

VIENNA, (via London,) May 6.—Duke d'Avarna, the Italian Ambassador, conferred yesterday with Baron Burian, Austro-Hungarian Foreign Minister. Much importance is attached to the interview, but no announcement has been made as to the result. The negotiations with Italy are generally regarded as having reached a critical stage.

GENEVA, May 6, (via Paris.)—Newspapers of Southern Germany, advices from Vienna say, discussing the Italian-Austrian situation, admit that it is "extremely grave for our ally and us."

RAIDERS SINK VESSEL CLOSE TO QUEENSTOWN

Submarine Shells Schooner Off Kinsale—Two Trawlers and Danish Steamer Sunk.

LONDON, May 6.—The schooner Earl of Latham was sunk today by a German submarine off Kinsale, on the Irish coast, thirteen miles southwest of Queenstown. The crew was permitted to take to the small boats, and was rescued by a trawler. The submarine fired nine shells at the schooner before she sank.

The Danish steamer Cathay, from Copenhagen for Chinese ports, was torpedoed late last night in the North Sea. She went down in twenty minutes. Her passengers and the members of her crew, totalling forty-three persons, took to the small boats, and all were landed safely at Ramsgate.

The trawler Stratton of Grimsby was sunk in the North Sea yesterday by the gunfire of a German submarine. The crew was taken on board the submarine. Afterward the seacocks of the trawler were opened, but this method of sinking the vessel proved too slow, and four hours later the Germans fired eight shells at the Stratton. The submarine commander said to the fishing skipper: "We don't want to hurt you, but you were taking food to England, and we must stop that."

The fishermen were then ordered to embark in a small boat which had been taken from the Stratton. They landed at Hartlepool today.

The trawler Merrie Islington was torpedoed by a submarine near Whitby, off the Yorkshire coast. A mine sweeper which picked up the crew was chased by the same submarine.

Notwithstanding the severe losses they have suffered, the trawlers continue fishing as usual.

The British steamer Cayo Romano, which left Newport News on April 19, was attacked by a submarine, a torpedo missing her by only a few feet. She escaped, aided by the fog, under a full head of steam.

KAISER IN BERLIN, GETS AN OVATION

Cheering Crowds Surround His Motor Car—Talk of Conference on Italy.

AMSTERDAM, (via London,) May 6.—The Nieuw Rotterdamsche Courant says it learns that Emperor William arrived in Berlin yesterday at noon from headquarters, and that he was enthusiastically cheered by the populace.

"From the station to the palace," the newspaper adds, "the Emperor's motor car could only proceed slowly through the dense crowds. The Emperor was looking fresh and well. The Empress was visibly moved by the great ovation accorded the Emperor."

LONDON, May 6.—A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph from Copenhagen says it is reported in Berlin that Emperor William, Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the Imperial Chancellor and Gottlieb von Jagow, the Foreign Secretary, have arrived in the capital in connection with the Italian situation.

CROSS DESERT TO VICTORY.

CAPE TOWN, May 6.—The following official statement was issued today:

"General Botha has occupied the important railway junction Karibis and other stations, (German Southwest Africa.) He expects to occupy Windhuk very soon. Large quantities of rolling stock, including seven locomotives, were taken at Karibis.

"The town was occupied after a forced march of thirty-five miles over a waterless waste, under conditions of heat, thirst, and hunger, which called for the greatest resolution and grit."

GUARDS EGYPT'S COTTON.

Great Britain Limits Exports to Specified Countries.

LONDON, May 6.—Great Britain has requested the Government of Egypt to prohibit the export of cotton to all ports other than French, Russian, Spanish, and Portugese ports.

Foreign Secretary Grey informed the House of Commons this afternoon that he expected this prohibition to become operative very shortly.

An official proclamation today prohibits the entry into Great Britain of Belgian banknotes. The prohibition of the exportation of British coal anywhere except to British possessions or to Great Britain's allies, also was officially gazetted today.

The Marquis of Crewe in the House of Lords this afternoon said that the British Government hoped that the exportable margin of wheat in India would be sufficient to prevent anything like a panic in wheat in this country in the current year.

Government interference with the export of wheat from India, the speaker said, was due to the belief that unless some strong action were to be taken a serious position would be created in India, owing to the high prices to which wheat was advancing.

The Government was prepared, the Marquis concluded, to take as much wheat from India as it could get, in view of what the price of wheat was likely to be in this country.

a sign of weakness and lack of confidence."

Spencer Wilkinson, who ranks among the best war writers, has written an exhaustive study of the eastern situation, in which he points out that a successful attack on the Russian line from Malastow through Gorlice to Gromnik would force the Russians to withdraw at any rate their right wing from the Carpathians. "If the German announcements are confirmed," says Mr. Wilkinson, "Sunday's battle might prove decisive as regards the campaign in the Carpathians.

"If that should be the case the whole aspect of the war would be changed. The Russians in Galicia would be reduced to the defense of Przemysl and of its communications through Lemberg against an enveloping attack—no easy matter—and the Germans would be able greatly to reduce their forces in this part of the theatre of war. They would then be in a position to renew their attacks against Warsaw, which would be from their point of view the preferable course because success there would enable them to remain entirely on the defensive in the east and largely to reinforce their armies in the west."

Mr. Wilkinson concludes by calling attention to the fact that the German announcements were "clever, because they were made to appeal rather to strategists than to the public at large, and were evidently meant for the military chiefs of certain armies at present neutral."

PREPARES A REPRISALS BILL

Joseph King Will Advocate the Use of Gas by the British.

LONDON, May 6.—The suggestion that Great Britain adopt measures in retaliation for the use of gases in battle by the Germans took concrete form today. Joseph King, representing the North District of Somerset in the House of Commons, announced his intention of introducing a resolution on this subject on Tuesday.

The resolution sets forth "that this House agrees to such measures of retaliation as is essential to prevent success attaching to such gross and unparalleled violation of the rules of war; subject, however, to the condition that in the preparation of any gas used by his Majesty's military forces the utmost regard be paid to the dictates of humanity."

DARDANELLES GAINS PRAISED BY ASQUITH

DESCRIBES THE LANDING

29,000 Men Put Ashore the First Day—Fierce Resistance of the Turks Causes Heavy Losses.

LONDON, May 6.—The operations in the Dardanelles are being pressed forward under highly satisfactory conditions, Premier Asquith told the House of Commons this afternoon in the course of a statement upon the combined naval and land attacks on the Gallipoli Peninsula.

The Premier spoke in part as follows:

"At daybreak of April 25 the landing occurred, the troops making use of six landing places. By nightfall 29,000 men had been disembarked in the face of fierce opposition by infantry and artillery intrenched behind successive lines of wire entanglements.

"The leading troops of the Twenty-ninth Division were held up all day to the west of Sedd-el Bahr, but at sunset they succeeded in a fine attack along the heights, which made possible the taking of a good position covering the disembarkation of the remainder of the division.

"The landing brigade of the Australian and New Zealand corps went ashore at Gaba Tepe at 4:30 o'clock in the morning in complete silence. The enemy opened a heavy fire at point-blank range, but the beach was rushed with good effect and the attack carried out with the utmost dash up the slope.

"The troops effected a landing at Kum Kale and advanced with great gallantry. Every report speaks of the magnificent co-operation of the naval forces. I regret the casualties were very heavy, including the death of Brig. Gen. Napier.

"During April 26 the disembarkation continued. The troops ashore were subjected to continuous and determined attacks from the enemy, but these in every case were repulsed with heavy losses. The Twenty-ninth Division, under command of General Hunter, with great valor carried the Turkish position at Sedd-el Bahr, which consisted of rocky ravines, ruined houses and wire entanglements.

"By evening of April 27 the 29th Division was firmly established across the Gallipoli Peninsula, having advanced two miles from the point of landing. They were joined by the French troops who, having fulfilled the task of silencing the hostile batteries on the Asiatic Coast which interfered with the landing on the Gallipoli Peninsula, had recrossed the strait. The Australian and New Zealand Corps defeated every counter-attack and steadily gained ground.

"The disembarkation continued on April 28 and 29. By May 2 a further advance had been made by the French and British troops on the southern end of the peninsula, and the Australian and New Zealand corps had been reinforced by the Royal Naval Division. The positions everywhere had been consolidated.

"In the successful performance of this, one of the most difficult operations of the war, a landing on an open beach in the face of determined opposition, the troops engaged displayed unsurpassed courage and skill.

FLEET MAKING PROGRESS.

Heavy Attacks on the Forts and Land Operations.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BEFORE GALIPOLI PENINSULA, Sunday Evening, May 2, (Special Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—The past three days have seen continued progress by land and water. My own observations have been confirmed at many points by the refugees from various parts of the peninsula and by local traders who have been allowed to approach near the area of operations.

The prominent feature of the operations since my last message on Friday has been evidence of the great damage wrought by the guns of the fleet, aided possibly, by the artillery of the land forces, to the forts of the narrows region. I have already reported the burning of Maidos, on Thursday, and that everything in that particular spot has been battered and burned out of action, was clear from the fact that the town could still be observed on fire Friday afternoon.

Shortly after noon smoke began to arise from behind the ridge which hides Kilid Bahr from being seen from my vantage point. Added to the smoke from that particular spot were great clouds ascending from somewhere beyond Kum Kale, and the result was that for a time the whole theatre of fighting was enveloped in the densest curtain of smoke. About 3 o'clock, from yet another point, smoke began to pour upward. This, it is believed, was caused by the outbreak of fire at Boghali Kalessi. The various black streaks gradually died down till only one was left—that from Killid Bohr. At 4:30 o'clock black funnels were rising in tremendous masses and spreading over the entire peninsula. This continued till night.

The burning of villages and forts were also features of Saturday's operations. Early in the morning there was a noticeable concentration at the entrance of the straits of French and English battleships, and soon a vigorous firing comenced up the Dardanelles and against the Asiatic side. The Queen Elizabeth could be especially picked out. She was getting in most destructive shots at Boghali Kales, opposite Nagara, and spout after spout of earth and smoke shot up till it could plainly be seen that the place was on fire.

It was a wonderful sight. First one saw a vivid flash of fire from the snipe guns. Then, about twenty seconds later, the destruction on the far hillside, where the giant shell landed, could be noted with the naked eye. Then, following across the waves, went the noice of the 15-inch guns.

Midday brought another gigantic burst of smoke, and in the afternoon, from a position directly opposite the mouth of the strait, I could see plainly the shot from which it came. It appeared to me to be Chanak on fire. Far up the strait the warships were busily engaged and the smoke of the burning fort was like a volcano in activity.

It may be taken, therefore, as certain that the fleet has made considerable progress during the past few days. During the three days covered by this message, little activity has been observable on the southern part of the peninsula. The systematic bombardment of the wood and village, north of Tree Peak, appears to have driven the Turks have been driven back to that line.

In other zones of operations, further north along the ridges leading to the narrows, one can see that our forces are pushing forward, for the righting recedes further and further toward the blue straits. Now and again at times during yesterday's fighting it could clearly hear the pitter patter of the machine guns far up among the hills there, and the movement of troops were to be seen.

Late in the afternoon several battleships at the entrance began shelling the positions inland beyond Kum Kale and Erenkeui. This I took to be in order to facilitate the advance of the French troops which were landed at Kum Kale. For some hours that district was densely clouded with smoke and dust. The artillery could plainly be seen moving through these clouds, following the road leading north from Yenis-Hehr and along that leading to Erenkeui denoted the advance, I should think, of the infantry.

It was fascinating in the extreme to watch the dust, which signified the battle in that particular region, so near to the scene of Troyad, after centuries of quiet and ages remote from the making of history. This classic region has once more become the ground upon which Europe and Asia are striving in battle, and the history of epic magnitude is being wrought out.

ALLIES HELD, SAY TURKS.

CONSTANTIOPLE, May 5, (Via Wireless to Berlin and London, May 6.—The following official statement regarding the operations in the Dardanelles was issued this afternoon by the Turkish War Office:

"The unfavorable situation of the enemy in the Dardanelles remains unchanged. Reports from Athens regarding the occupation of Gallipoli and Nagara by landing forces are untrue.

"The Gallipoli Peninsula is entirely at our disposal for military movements. The enemy holds only two points on the coast. Sedd-el-Bahr and Aviburnu, thanks to the constant firing of his ships. The enemy is unable to make any moves against the Turkish encircling forces.

"The Asiatic coast has been freed of our enemies."

AUSTRIA HELD EX-SENATOR.

Spy Report Entangles Lafayette Young—Promptly Released.

VIENNA, May 6, (via London.)—Ex-United States Senator Lafayette Young of Des Moines, Iowa, accompanied by a former American Deputy Consul at Berne, Switzerland, was arrested at Innsbruck, Austria, yesterday on suspicion of espionage directed against Mr. Young's companion.

Mr. Young was promptly released, with apologies, after a few hours' detention in his hotel, but his companion was held in custody in the hotel until today before he was able to satisfy the suspicions of the authorities, who apparently had been warned to look for a man of the same name.

Mr. Young arrived in Vienna this morning. Speaking of the incident, he said he saw no reason for complaint. He left later in the day for Berlin.

DES MOINES, Iowa, May 6.—Ex-Senator Young left here for his European tour on Jan. 26, first visiting London, where he spent a month. He was in Belgium for ten days, and since has been in Paris and on the French battlefields. He was in the French trenches in the northern part of France on April 15, 16, and 17.

Mr. Young is in Europe in the capacity of war correspondent of his own newspaper, The Des Moines Capital.

You Don't Have To Burn High Priced Coal:

A ton of Anthracite Coal costs, on an average, $5.46—a ton of Bituminous about $3.75. And that Bituminous Coal, which costs an average of $1.71 per ton less, contains more heat than the ton of Anthracite.

There is no ordinance in the City of New York, or in any other city, that prohibits the use of Bituminous Coal. But the ordinance does say that smoke will not be permitted.

are burning cheap bituminous coal, smokelessly, in some of the best buildings in New York City. And they are saving their owners hundreds of coal dollars every year.

As a matter of fact a Kewanee Smokeless Boiler saves fuel money in two ways. It permits the use of cheaper coal—and it gets a bigger percentage of the heat from the coal it does use.

These are facts which are proven by actual installations right here in New York City.

BREMEN BURGHERS PLAN A TRADE WAR

Organizing to Capture England's Commerce After Peace Is Concluded.

INDUSTRY ON A WAR BASIS

From a Staff Correspondent.

BREMEN, April 8.—Bremen is certainly the most American of all German cities. You feel at once at home here, especially when you pass plate-glass windows on the main street painted with signs of American railroads, American express companies, and American bars; also when you discover that the proprietor of the corner cigar store is a German-American from Chicago and speaks with a nasal twang that makes you homesick. He admits his acquired nationality, however, in a whisper, so that a German customer may not learn his secret, adding, "It doesn't pay to be an American nowadays in Germany." The feeling against Americans because of the sale of ammunition and other war material to the Allies (fanned by the almost daily references to it in the German press) has spread even to Bremen, you note regretfully.

As far as appearances go, the ancient platitude about Berlin, "that you wouldn't know there was a war," holds good for Bremen. The life of the city seems to be continuing on orthodox lines. If there are no streams of American and other ocean travelers going and coming, the ticket windows and gateways at the railroad station nevertheless remind you of a bargain sale at a New York department store on Monday morning. Only the character of the traffic has changed. You see many sailors, going and coming, many in mufti, carrying pasteboard boxes—reserves for the Kaiser's young navy; officers of the hibernating merchant marine, with evidences of their new militant character; pursers who once smiled at $2 tips, now proudly wearing the little swords that look like paper cutters, which officers of the navy carry on land; wives, sweethearts, mothers, grandmothers, with quantities of baggage; but there is no confusion, because the Germans are orderly even when they get excited.

I was more interested in seeing the Bremen business men than the city; was particularly interested to find out how these merchants, whose business was as dead as the proverbial doornail, whose shipping had stopped like a clock that has run down, were taking it. I had occasion to meet a score of them in the Chamber of Commerce, leading exporters and shipping men; they were not only taking their losses gamely, without whining—they were full of fighting spirit. You find yourself, paradoxically, war corresponding on the water front.

"Mobilizing for a Trade War."

If the Bremen merchants are a fair sample of the general run of German exporters and shippers, the peace treaty that must come some time will be only the starting gong for a trade war to the knife against England and English goods. You feel that they would give away their goods to capture Britain's trade on the commercial battlefields of the world, if necessary. They make no attempt to conceal their bitterness of heart toward the arch-foe, England. One of them told me that the Bremen merchants were already mobilizing for the world trade war; that their committees were already at work, gathering statistics and formulating plans.

Most illuminating were the informal remarks of the chief spokesman of the Bremen merchants. When Germans feel intensely on any subject they generally orate, which makes the work of reporting easy; and what Eduard Achelis, Vice President of the Bremen Chamber of Commerce, had to say about his personal feelings gave you such a vivid insight into the war psychology of the German business men whose business has been stopped by the war that I asked him to "write it out and send it around to the hotel;" and so I offer TIMES readers, by way of a novelty, an interview with a German business man. Herr Achelis, who is known to the trade in America, said in part:

"Here in this building you find yourself in a house which since centuries has been the place where our leading men in trade and shipping life were wont to sit together in earnest deliberation over questions regarding Bremen's commercial interests and such questions as involve German national life. Never, however, in all these centuries, has so much serious and hard work been done here and questions of such vital importance been consulted about and solved, as during the past eight months, since the 2d of August, 1914.

"The greater the difficulties were which our enemies stirred up, the heavier the blows seemed to fall on our heads, as far as trade and shipping and industry was concerned, the more brutal Great Britain's means grew to encircle Germany and throttle her, to render impossible commerce and intercourse between the neutral countries and Germany, the higher has the German, the Bremen merchant, held his head and the more strenuous became his efforts to overcome all difficulties. He showed his absolute defiance against all the foul means and plots born in British brains and put into efficacy against our nation.

"While our gallant soldiers—husbands, brothers, and sons—are fighting against the enemy at the frontiers, east and west, while they strive to keep at bay the enemy's superior numbers, at home commerce and industry are doing an immense work, peaceful labor. From the very first moment it was evident that Germany's economic life could not be allowed to suffer, that it was to be furthered wherever and however it could be done. And the great task proved to be a full success. German commerce has done the utmost to provide German industry with such materials as German soil does not produce. Our soldiers could do their heart-breaking work, sure that neither poverty nor need would be the fate of their wives and children. They have all been fully provided for. And he who wanted to work has found more opportunities to do so than before.

Britain's Seizure of Colonies.

"To be sure, there are commercial interests which have come to a complete standstill; for instance, those which are focused in our colonies. In the most brutal, shameful manner have the English taken possession of these colonies; in the most shameful manner have they treated the German merchants, their employes, their wives. They had them transported back into the wilderness, and women and children shipped to England guarded by negroes.

"But even these merchants who seem to have lost everything are full of confidence and hope for a restitution of their rights and property in a future not too far away, and other men whose businesses are doing well now make new plans now already for enlarging their trade and widening their connections after a victorious and successful war.

"Bremen has always been accustomed to struggle hard for her life, being compelled to compete with mighty neighbors east and west—Hamburg, the Dutch ports, Antwerp. Bremen has learned to be strong in severe times, and just for that reason, that it never had time to enjoy a quiet life of prosperity, she was fully prepared for all emergencies—even the war! You will find on our faces the signs of earnest deliberation, as the severe time will have it. But at the same time you will find us full of confidence, of absolute certainty of a bright future, which confidence is founded in the unshaken belief of the impossibility of a defeat of our army and navy."

The Spirit of a Free City.

This militant merchant said they were all filled with the "true old Hanseatic commercial spirit," and although you had never met this particular brand in German before, you were inclined to believe him, and respect this fighting battalion of business men. The Hanseatic spirit seems to differ from the average German spirit only in being more intense, outspoken and aggressive—in other words, almost American; this probably because Bremen and others in the Hansa League are free cities, and because their business men have come in closer and more frequent contact with American ways of doing and talking.

I visited two factories here, said to be representative of Bremen's industries, and report on them only because they throw some first hand, authentic light on economic and industrial conditions in Germany. The first was the extensive plant of the Hansa Lloyd, one of the great German automobile manufacturing corporations. The Hansa Lloyd works were running at full capacity, and there was a reason—they were working almost exclusively for the army turning out military automobiles, &c. Here were long lines of heavy motor trucks, inspected, tagged, and ready for shipment, with scores of motor trucks in all stages of construction in the shops. Work was also being pushed on motor ambulances, and a new type of car, field post delivery automobile. Most interesting of all, by way of novelty, was a new war specialty of the Lloyd works—a light model motor truck with wheels as high as buggy wheels, specially designed for invading the mud roads of Poland. Specialization could go no further. In the repair room was a touring car with a past—a ramshackle, broken-down French machine, that looked as if it had fallen over a precipice and then caught fire. But its motor, they said, was still good, and the machine was worth salvaging and repairing. Unfortunately nobody on the premises knew the history of its capture.

Warning Against Spies.

The machine shops seemed to be about equally divided between making parts for war automobiles and haking shells. There was every evidence here of intensive manufacturing—and of working day and night and Sundays. My attention was not called to three placards of large size, printed in red, and hanging on the walls of the various workrooms, but the ytold their own story, and a most significant one. Thye were sponsored and signed by the military authorities. The first handbill called upon German workmen to fight for their Fatherland by holding their tongues, particularly those workmen employed in factories working wholly or in part for the Government. Spies, and particularly women spies, were known to be lying in wait to eavesdrop where honest working men gathered, in the hope of snapping up items of information about the manufacture of shells and other war material. A few indiscreet words might cost the lives of many of their somrades in the field. Silence yas a patriotic duty was the message of this placard.¼

The second was more important. It said in substance that factories working for the Government must make every effort to speed up their production to the maximum, and get the product out in record time. Its tenor was an appeal to workmen, foremen, superintendents and directors alike to work for the Fatherland by traveling at top speed and without let-up

The third indicated that Germany expected every workingman to do his duty either in the field or in the factory½ that when his turn came to be called to the colors he must report at once the moment he left his job. It gathered from this that there must be no useless loafing.

These three handbills (which were worth printing verbatim as quasi-historical documents, if you hadn't hesitated to take notes under the circumstances) gave you an inkling of how all German industry has been mobilized and was lined up in Germany's fight for existence. Yet there was nothing feverish, nothing exciting in the atmosphere of this big war material factory. War had proved to be the greatest efficiency expert—and here was the same quiet, smooth-running organization, painstaking and painfully thorough to the least little detail, just as you had found it at the front. What would probably have been heartbreaking to any one but Germans was to these workers merely 'discipline and duty.'

Machinists in Aprons.

I mention a visit next to a large coffee-roasting corporation, producers of a widely advertised caffein-free coffee, only because somewhat different conditions pointed the same industrial moral. Here one noticed that mostly girls and women were employed; there were even some pretty girl machinists in lac caps and long white aprons. It was a very up-to-date plant, for half of the machines and machine tools were of American manufacture. [Excision by censor.]

"This corporation publishes a weekly "war paper" for circulation among its employes, and a copy of April 2 gave you some interesting details as to the part this one corporation and its workpeople were playing in the war. The whole front page was devoted to a "nachruf" (roll of honor) and biographical sketch of their most recently fallen employe. The last page bore the rubric "Table of Honor" and the Iron Cross. It contained the names and rank of four employes who had fallen to date and of ten who had won the Iron Cross. Two full pages were devoted to an address list of its employes in the field and showed that 110 were with the colors on land and sea. A modest paragraph recited that the corporation had subscribed 300,000 marks ($75,000) to the second German war loan, its Directors individually 50,000 marks and its employes 50,000 marks. Another paragraph gave the names of eleven employes belonging to the Landsturm who had been called in in the preceding two weeks, with the remark: "To continue our busiess becomes thereby still harder. Of course, we had to look around for men to take their places; but substitutes are hard to find." The rest of the paper was chiefly filled with field post letters from its fighting employes.

This one corporation was worth a more extended study, as typical of German war industries generally. It gave you an interesting insight into the way German industry had adapted itself to war conditions, and also a clue as to the source—in part, at least—of Germany's financial and military strength.

To the neutral onlooker there is something almost pathetic in the way German industry is straining every nerve and tendon to keep up maximum production by increasing the efficiency of the survivors to make up for the lack of men. I was not surprised to learn that there was virtually no unemployment in Bremen. I had heard the same statement time and again from manufacturers and business men in Berlin. Labor, in fact, is much sought after and hard to get in Germany, and the workingman who has not yet been called to the colors is earning wages never dreamed of even in boom times of peace. What I had seen here also tallied up with what I had heard elsewhere; it is not too sweeping a statement to say that the Germans, with their peculiar talent for organization, are putting their industrial house in order and preparing to wage war as long as the enemy will keep it up. This is the clue you must follow if you want to understand social and economic conditions in Germany. It is a process of adaptation on a stupendous scale; but the Germans have gone about it so gradually that they are making the transition to the new State without any noticeable violent derangement in the whole complicated machinery of modern life—as yet.

Bremen's principal shock absorber in this difficult transition period is its "super-Red Cross Organization," which the North German Lloyd, whose shipping had been reduced to a state of suspended animation, turned over its whole palatial office building. The burghers of Bremen got away at the sound of the gun, and on the very day of troop mobilization mobilized their peace Red Cross, their women's organizations, their charitable and patriotic organizations, and other allied civic bodies into one big Central Help Committee, with subsidiary committees, to solve the new social and patriotic problems arising out of the war. The printed report of this super-Red Cross and its work to date looks like the annual report of a giant corporation to a small stockholder. One of its moving spirits, Pastor Frick, sketched out for me in popular form some of its activities, as follows:

The Bremen Red Cross.

The theory was to make all relief work concentric. It is run like a modern industrial corporation. There is an elaborate system of card-indexing and cross-indexing covering all aid given privately or publicly in Bremen, this for the purpose partly of gathering statistics as a guide to the future, partly to eliminate graft. It was found that before the card index was complete one woman had obtained Christmas presents from ten different sources, for example. The war Red Cross has fed 150,000 soldiers and sailors at the railroad station since the beginning of the war. It has established sleeping quarters at the station, with beds for 900. Pastor Frick told a humorous story about a bow-legged tramp who had toured all Germany, posing as a "war volunteer" reporting for cavalry regiment to join. When caught by the card index on attempting to play a return engagement in Bremen he remarked: "The food at Frankfort is the best."

Many tons of literature have been sent to the soldiers in the field. The demand for moral literature is great, and curiously enough, the classics and so-called heavy literature are preferred by the men in the trenches. The fighters appear not to want war literature at all.

The Red Cross has sent out altogether 150 freight-car loads of "Liebesgaben," or love gifts, each carload of an average value of 30,000 marks. It has also sent $75,000 worth of "ways and means for destroying vermin" in the field, which speaks volumes for Poland, for this is from one city alone!

It has equipped and is maintaining three hospital trains, given by private individuals, each at a cost of about 70,000 marks. Coffee and reading rooms have been established near the railrod station, which are visited on an average by 500 to 600 soldiers and sailors daily.

Its real work, however, is in caring for the families of the fighters in the field—a delicate task, for, as Pastor Frick put it, "there are no X-rays for people's hearts." The Red Cross gave away 20,000 meals a week at the start of the war, but found that it was making life too comfortable for the poor; many of the women getting up late, eating free meals, and then going to the "movies."

The Red Cross has departments for the unemployed, also for "war cripples," as well as a special department for needy musicians and artists. Assistance is being given to 2,000 families. Over 2,500 have received employment in special sewing and knitting rooms. Cooking schools for teaching thrifty war cooking have been established. These are only a few features of the activities of this amazing war organisation. Best of all, no peripatetic collecting for charity is allowed in Bremen. Once every month the city is canvassed for contributions of money and goods; so, whether you are a millionaire or a man of modest means, you know that you will be approached equally and democratically on the first of the month.

A German Confession of Faith.

I had occasion this evening to meet and talk with the Mayor of Bremen, half a dozen Senators of the Free and Hansa City, President F. Achells and General Manager Heinecken of the North German Lloyd and other hard-headed, confident business men worth knowing, who differed from their comrades on the front in East and West only in fighting at the water front in frock coats instead of field gray. The Mayor of Bremen, as we should call him, Dr. Buff, but who rejoices in the high title of "Pesident of of the Senate and Herr Burgomaster," is worth quoting in part, to round out this one-day study of Bremen and "get across" the Atlantic some of the atmosphere as I breathed it here. Mayor Buff referred grimly to the heavy sacrifices which the war had imposed upon Germany and the German people, and then he burst into the following interesting and quite characteristic (of the Germans) confession of faith:

"We have faith in his Majesty our Kaiser and in his Hauptquartier; we have faith in the courage and thoroughness of each one of our warriors in the field; in the force and preparedness to strike of our field-gray ones and our brave bluejackets, who sit in their submarines and now wage the 'hunger war' against England. We have perfect faith that this German Empire will not go to pieces, and that a friendly Fate will continue to watch over Germany's welfare in the interest of humanity.

"But we are waging war not only against our enemies, against brigades and divisions of Russians, English, and French, but since the beginning of the war we have had to fight against brigades and divisions of lies. That leaves us quite cool and unconcerned, but we regret that the people outside are not in a position personally to inform themselves as to the real state of affairs.

"Write them about our Hansa city, that the old Hanseatic spirit is marching with head erect and full of courage, with all Germany, looking toward a glorious, sunny future for our dear Fatherland."

Dr. Buff's few words will give THE TIMES readers a good insight into contemporary German psychology. More important for practical purposes was the fact that in the afternoon I had seen a brand-new regiment drilling on the banks of the Weser—and Bremen had already sent out at least three regiments into the field, of which I have personal knowledge, to say nothing of its sailors.

TRIES TO REASSURE DUNKIRK

PARIS, May 6.—General Eydoux, Military Governor of Dunkirk, issued a statement today to reassure the people of the city that there was no longer danger to them of a renewal of the bombardment such as was directed against Dunkirk on two days recently by the Germans. The statement says:

"The continued exodus of inhabitants as a result of the recent bombardment might cast doubts on the calm self-possession shown thus far. The positions of the Allies are intact, and the situation on the Belgium front is excellent.

"Measures have been taken to prevent a further bombardment by heavy guns. The result of these measures can be seen, and the inhabitants of Dunkirk need only to remain quietly at home Nearly all the victims of previous bombardments were killed in the streets, and all that is needed is to seek shelter if the bombardment is renewed."

SEES GERMAN PLAN TO DEFY THIS NATION

ASSAILS GEORGE B. SHAW

With Viereck and Frank Harris, He Is Responsible for Confusing the Issues, Poet Says.

A warning that Germany has long contemplated establishing colonies in South America in disregard of the Monroe Doctrine was sounded yesterday by Alfred Noyes, the English poet, at a luncheon at which he and Sir Walter Raleigh, a direct descendant of the original Sir Walter, and Professor in Oxford University, were guests of the Pilgrims at the Whitehall Club. Mr. Noyes bitterly arraigned the whole place-in-the-sun policy of Germany and denounced the pro-German propagandists in this country and in England for beclouding the fundamental issues of the present war.

In proof of his assertion that Germany had designs on South America Mr. Noyes produced a small atlas published by a prominent firm in Germany and containing a map of South America with a score or more of places marked in red as proposed German colonies. Mr. Noyes explained after the luncheon that he was not sure whether the atlas had ever been used as a text book in the German schools, but that this did not seem unlikely in view of the fact that the book had been put out by one of the leading German educational publishers—Perthes.

Replying to the charge made by G. Bernard Shaw that England had played the part of hypocrite in the case of Belgium, Mr. Noyes said that far from being hypocritical England would insist upon reparation for the "unspeakable wrongs" of Belgium as one of the first conditions of peace. Germany, he declared, had no more right to be in Belgium today than to be in New England for the purpose of invading Canada.

Atlas Shows New Colonies.

"Once admit that right and there is nothing left secure either to ourselves or to the United States," he continued. "Do you think the Monroe Doctrine, for example, could escape? The Germans have no intention of colonizing on this Continent, they tell you. Well, it is fair once more to convict them out of their own mouths. I have in my possession an atlas published in Germany by one of the leading publishers—Perthes. This atlas contains a map of South America upon which between twenty-five and thirty places are inscribed in red as German colonies—not spheres of influence—but colonies.

"This map it might be well worth while to study as to whether it is preparatory to making much larger spaces red upon the Continent.

"And Germany," he added, "with her heel in a little neutral country whose neutrality she had guaranteed is now proposing the neutrality of the seas guaranteed by Germany. Historically, the British fleet has always been used to secure the freedom of the seas. The Germans were so free to go to India as Englishmen."

Mr. Noyes contended that this country had much in common with England in the present struggle. He pictured England as having reached the most democratic stage of her development waging war "against your old enemies, tyranny and domination of brute force."

He mentioned Shaw in England and George Sylvester Viereck and Frank Harris here as the men chiefly responsible for confusing the issues on the British side. Shaw, he said, had tried to show that the war was merely a fight of one military caste against another, while Harris attempted to explain it as a war "waged by the great landowners of England and the official aristocracy against the democracy of Germany."

"This campaign," he said, "has secured the great fundamental fact that it is the most democratic Government we have ever had; the Government that gave the old age pensions and home rule; that seemed on the verge of armed conflict with these reactionary elements in England—it was this Government, with its heart set above all things on the reduction of armaments and the devotion of all its resources to its own social needs, this Government, including the statesman who was mobbed for his bitter denunciation of the Boer War, that determined to uphold international law against force, and not to suffer the tyranny of the sword under any name. In that war, and on that fundamental basis, England and this great republic are at one. The neutrality observed by this country is a real and dignified neutrality, and every Englishman who understands it respects it."

Of Shaw, Mr. Noyes said he was one of the two greatest hypocrites in English literature. Of Viereck he said:

"After reading the published books of the editor of the Fatherland, including his 'Confessions of a Barbarian,' England is happy indeed in her enemies."

Expects a Long War.

Sir Walter Raleigh, who sails for home today, expressed the belief that the war would last much longer and grow ever more terrible. For this reason he urged the Pilgrims to bear in mind that in the thick of the fighting there was true courtesy being shown on both sides. During his brief visit here, he said, he had not noticed any particular difference between this country and England.

"I believe your traffic does go to the right instead of the left," he added, "and that you have more rocking chairs than we have. Also, I must say that the facilities for enjoying alcoholic liquor here are more spotted than at home."—this with a gesture at assorted brands of cocktails at the guests' table.

President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia, who presided in the absence of Joseph H. Choate, President of the Pilgrims, introduced the speakers by declaring that for some months Americans had been trying to solve the problem how to be neutral though intelligent.

He then proposed this toast:

To those great principles of civil and religious liberty, of representative government, and of the right of every man to control his own opinions, his own actions, and his own possessions, subject only to the equal right of every other man to do the same, which principles have brought the British Empire to its present broad place in the history of mankind and which have laid the foundation for the social and political fabric of these United States. May these principles win quick and peaceful conquest in the hearts and minds of every people on this globe.

The customary Pilgrims' toasts to the President of the United States and the King of England were drunk standing.

Among those at the guests' table were Bishop David H. Greer, Sir Arthur Herbert, Alton B. Parker, Admiral Usher, U. S. N.; Dean West of Princeton, Robert Bridges, E. H. Gary, Fire Commissioner Robert Adamson, Theodore Rousseau, the Mayor's secretary; Sir Walter Courtenay Bennett, British Consul General; Cornelius Vanderbilt, George T. Wilson, Oscar S. Straus, and Major Johnson, representing Major Gen. Leonard Wood.

Price aside, there are certain well-defined and indispensable requisites which must characterize every satisfactory Suit of men's clothing.
These requisites have been the constant study of the Saks Tailoring Organization for many years. We make Suits for men at a number of prices, from $17.50 up. It is of our Suits at $17.50, $20, $23 and $25 we desire especially to speak at this time.

135 patterns and colorings of fabrics alone

FIRST—These Suits are made after the patterns of the master designers, just as though they were the highest priced Suits we sell.
SECOND—We buy direct everything that goes into these Suits; every inch of fabric, every yard of thread, every button, every item of trimming.
THIRD—The tailoring and finishing is under our direct supervision. The famous Saks Tailoring Organization makes all Saks Clothing; we do not buy "here and there, hither and yon," of manufacturers whose standards vary and whose product smacks more of the hot iron and tailor's "goose" than of lasting goodness.
FOURTH—We maintain, the year 'round, a steadily employed corps of highly skilled tailors, harmoniously working under ideal physical conditions and according to modern executive methods. Nothing is "haphazard," nothing accidental. We simply plan to turn out the best Suits that can be built at each price and then do it.

So then, if you will be good enough to come to the Store and ask to see the wonderful assortment of fabrics, colorings, patterns and styles in these Suits at $17.50, $20, $23, or $25, we will be sure to sell you one of them.
5th Floor.

Chauffeur's Suits at $25.00

Pleated, plain or Norfolk Coat, with trousers or breeches. All-wool whipcord or worsted serge, in Oxford gray. Made and finished as only Saks makes Chauffeurs' Apparel. Correct in style, a perfect fit assured, and satisfactory wear guaranteed. Motor Apparel Shop, 6th Floor.

Straw Hats, "Front!"

OUR Straw Hats were designed a month ago, not a year ago, and designed to harmonize with the prevailing fashions in Summer Suits, Collars, Cravats. That means becomingness.

Besides broader brims and lower crowns, we show every sort of shape, having that tang of individuality which fences you off from "the crowd."

All braids—Sennits, Splits, Leghorns, Bangkoks, Milans—with our "tailor-made" ribbons.

PEOPLE OF JAPAN WANT NO MORE WAR

Famous Architect, Here on Business, Expects No Fighting with China.

SENTIMENT FOR LONG PEACE

Architecture Advancing in Mikado's Kingdom on Mixed Lines—Only One Skyscraper.

Ryutaro Furuhashi of Tokio, one of the leading architects of Japan, left last night for Pittsburgh to examine structural steel at the Carnegie works. He is the Japanese Commissioner of Architecture to the Panama-Pacific Exposition and designed the Japanese Building at San Francisco.

Mr. Furuhashi, who has lived several years in China, having been consulting architect to the Chinese Government, does not believe there will be more war in the Far East. "Perhaps it may be impossible to avoid some trouble," he said at the Imperial yesterday, "but it is a fact that the Japanese people do not want war. We have had enough of it to last for a long time. We want peace.

"Architecture in Japan has now passed the transition stage," said Mr. Furuhashi. "Naturally, we have been much influenced of late years by European schools and styles, and we have adapted ideas from the French and the English, and to some extent from the Americans. But we have had to fit them to our surroundings. I designed last year what is perhaps the nearest approach to an American skyscraper that exists in Japan, the Tokio Marine Insurance Building, but it is only eight stories high, though it goes up 130 feet and contains 650 rooms.

"In designing the Japanese Building for the Panama-Pacific Exposition, I took the outline of the old temple of Kiukaku, at Kyoto, which dates back to the twelfth century. The inside, however, I had to modernize. For one thing, it would never have done to insist that visitors to the building remove their shoes, so I put parquet floors in the building.

"While I was in China I designed a number of Government buildings in Peking, Hankow, and Nankin.

"We have adopted modern methods of construction in Japan in the new big buildings. We have abundant building material, except that American structural steel is better than what we have. I should say that of the foreign styles of architecture we rather favor the English.

"Many wealthy Japanese have in the last few years built mansions after the European style. With us an architect has to be a contractor as well as designer. I was educated at the Imperial University in Tokio, and there I had to become thoroughly familiar with European as well as with Japanese and other Oriental architecture.

"Last year I designed and put up for Baron Tokugawa a mansion of stone in the northern part of Tokio. It was something like a great English house, but I had to modify the style to Japanese requirements and ideas of decoration.

"While the Japanese workmen excel, I think, in joiner's work, the fittings in the house, and particularly locks, have interested me over here. Usually the lock on a Japanese door is a wooden contrivance, concealed in the door, and worked by a secret device. I have been up looking over the plant of one of your biggest lockmakers and found truly wonderful safety devices. I am not buying materials, I am simply looking things over. This is my first trip to New York, and I have been much impressed, but I don't know when we shall demand the skyscraper in Japan. The tendency to earthquakes is rather against tall buildings."

SWOBODA GERMAN OFFICER.

Alleged Spy's Adventurous Career as Recounted by Paris Paper.

PARIS, May 6.—Raymond "Swoboda," whose arrest was due to the fire in the steamship La Touraine, and who now is charged with espoinage by the French military authorities, once served as a reserve in the German Army, according to information the Petit Parisien says it has obtained.

"Swoboda" has led an adventurous life, the newspaper says, if stories told by his acquaintances are to be believed. He was born in San Francisco, but was taken by his mother to Switzerland at the age of 5, after she had had a disagreement with his father. From Switzerland he is said to have gone to Germany, where he became associated with a man named Schwind, under which name "Swoboda" attended various schools in Switzerland and England.

He attended the university at Heidelberg in 1897. About this time two German missionaries were murdered in China and "Swoboda" enlisted with other students in the punitive expedition which was organized. After ten months' military service he resigned from the army and was employed by various business houses in Hongkong, Canton, and Tien-tsin, working at one time for an American geologist who was prospecting for oil.

"Swodoba" finally entered the service of the Russo-Chinese Bank at Shanghai, where he remained eighteen months. The Boxer rebellion then broke out, and he took service in the German expeditionary force, passing the examination for reserve officer.

When the uprising was quelled "Swoboda" again left the army and went to England, but after a short stay there returned to Shanghai and was re-employed by the Russo-Chinese Bank. He is then alleged to have become involved in an embezzlement after which he fled, was arrested, escaped, was recaptured, tried and sentenced in the German Consular Court.

Part of his term was served in a German fortress, but his sentenc is said to have been commuted, and he was released in 1904.

After his release from prison, his acquaintances assert, he came to France determined to start life anew, and took the name of Swoboda, which really was his, since he had not been adopted by Schwind. He had lived ten years in Paris and had built up a successful business as a broker when the war began.

Two Freed in Roseville Trust Case.

Frank Bruno and Antonio Miele, the West Orange constractors who were among those indicted in connection with the failure of the Roseville Trust Company and were placed on trial on Monday, were acquitted before Judge Osborne and a jury in the Court of Oyer and Terminer in Newark yesterday. The indictment charged the men as partners with conspiring to default, alleging that they "procured the embezzlement" of $28,221.12. According to the State, the account was first carried by the bank as Miele & Bruno and later as the Frank Bruno Company.

Intelligent Floor Walkers.

Josiah Jenkins of Sedgwick thinks city store floorwalkers are possessed of intelligence which has never been appreciated, reports The Sedgwick Pantagraph. In a Wichita store the week before Christmas Josiah approached a floorwalker and asked where he could find a suitable present for his wife. "How long have you been married?" asked the well-dressed guide book. "Twenty years," answered Josiah. "Bargain counter to the left, clear back," directed the floorwalker.—Kansas City Star.

accept the further concessions offered on Thursday by China, and will present an ultimatum before 3 o'clock this (Friday) afternoon unless the twenty-four demands are accepted by China without qualification.

The Japanese Legation continued yesterday its efforts to persuade the Chinese Government to concede Japan's demands without the necessity of serving upon China the ultimatum of the Japanese Government, which was received early yesterday morning.

The Secretary of the Legation visited the Foreign Office and informed Vice Minister Tsao Yulin that the Legation had received the ultimatum and that it would be presented unless China agreed to Japan's twenty-four demands before 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Tsao Yulin immediately visited the Winter Palace, the residence of Yuan Sid-kai, and, after a conference with the Executive and other members of the Governmnt, convyed to the Japanese Lgation the following cncessions:

China's New Grants.

China reiterated, regarding Shantung Province, that she would grant Japan everything that already had been granted to Germany there by treaty.

China agreed to grant Japan the right to work mines in South Manchuria and Eastern Mongolia; that all disputes between the Japanese in Manchuria, of whatever nature, shall be under Japanese jurisdiction; that schools and hospitals may lease land from the Chinese, thereby reserving land ownership; to grant a concession to Japan to build the Nan Charg-Chaochow-fu Railway, if Great Britain consents to the release of China from the negotiations begun concerning this railroad two years ago. The Japanese say they requested the concession for this railroad in 1907.

The three stipulations China made to the demands in the nature of counter-proposals last Sunday were not withdrawn by China. These were that China asked the right to participate in an international conference for a rearrangement of the altered status of Shantung; indemnity for the losses incurred in consequence of the Tsing-tao campaign, and the restoration of the status of Shantung as before the war.

It is said that the Chinese Government has resolved to communicate with the United States, Great Britain, Russia and France on receipt of the ultimatum, and that the nature of this communication will depend upon the nature of the ultimatum.

Ultimatum Expires Sunday.

TOKIO, May 6.—Official announcement was made here this afternoon that Japan had sent an ultimatum to China.

The Kokumin Shimbun states that in its ultimatum Japan stipulates that China must accept unconditionally the Japanese demands. The newspaper says in an extra edition that this was decided upon by the Imperial Council.

It is understood that the Japanese ultimatum demands acceptance by China of the Japanese demands within a time limit which expires at 6 P. M. of Sunday, May 9.

It is understood here that China, in one of the recent answers to the Japanese diplomats who are conducting the negotiations over the demands of Tokio, in addition to asking Japan to put in writing the promise to restore the Kiao-Chau concession to China, wanted Japan to agree to secure from the Allies the right for Chinese delegates to participate in the peace conference following the great war, to which gathering the question of the disposal of Kiao-Chau should be submitted. Japan likewise was requested to reimburse China for the expenses connected with and the damages arising from the campaign against Germany for the possession of Kiao-Chau.

Private advices have reached Tokio from Peking to the effect that Yuan Shih-kai, President of China, is anxious to avoid a rupture. These dispatches are declared to be reliable.

LONDON, May 6.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Tokio says Emperor Yoshihito gave his sanction to the ultimatum of China.

Reuter's Peking correspondent says the Japanese Legation has received instructions regarding the ultimatum. The correspondent adds that it is believed the Chinese Cabinet, in the event of the presentation of the ultimatum, will yield to main force.

JAPAN WOULD DEAL DIRECT WITH YUAN

Commissioner May Be Named as New Peace Effort—Bryan Explains U. S. Position.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Information has been received here from an authentic source that the Japanese Government has decided to make another effort to adjust with China the differences produced by the demands that have been construed in Peking as infringing on the territorial and administrative integrity of the Chinese Republic. This information comes from a source that is in close touch with the situation, and for that reason it gave encouragement to those who are anxious that there shall be no hostilities between China and Japan.

These advices, which are considered of great importance, were received just prior to the announcement of the Japanese Government tonight that an ultimatum had been sent, and the delay in presenting the ultimatum, as reported in Peking advices, may be for the purpose of gaining China's consent to a new way of settling their differences.

According to this information, the Japanese Government will send to Peking a commissioner with plenary powers to deal directly with President Yuan-Shi-kai in the hope of reaching an agreement with him in behalf of his Administration that will harmonize the present troubles and obviate a resort to hostilities on Japan's part.

Reports reaching Washington are that popular feeling in Japan is inflamed, and there is a loud clamor for war with China. Knowledge of this condition caused those who learned of the understood intention of Japan to send a commissioner to deal directly with President Yuan, to express the fear that such a move would not meet with popular approval and that the Japanese Government would be compelled to demand that China accede to the Japanese conditions or take the consequences of refusal.

First Washington Statement.

For the first time since the Japanese-Chinese negotiations became a matter of interest in the United States, the Washington Government tonight made a definite statement concerning it. This statement recites that at the beginning of the negotiations the Japanese Government informed the United States confidentially of the matters under discussion and at the same time gave assurances that there would be no interference with the "open door" or the rights of either China or the treaty nations, including the United States. These assurances, which the statement does not in any way combat, are directly opposed to China's understanding of the Japanese demands, which she regards as infringing on her political and territorial rights.

The official statement of the State Department follows:

In order that there may be no misunderstanding of the position of the United States in reference to the negotiations pending between Japan and China the following announcement is made:

At the beginning of negotiations the Japanese Government confidentially informed this Government of the matters which were under discussion, and accompanied the information by the assurance that Japan had no intention of interfering with either the political independence or territorial integrity of China, and that nothing that she proposed would discriminate against other powers having treaties with China or interefere with the "open door" policy to which all the leading nations are committed.

This Government has not only had no thought of surrendering any of its treaty rights with China, but it has never been asked by either Japan or China to make any surrender of these rights. There is no abatement of its inetrest in the welfare and progress of China, and its sole interest in the present negotiations is that they may be concluded in a manner satisfactory to both nations and that the terms of the agreement will not only contribute to the prosperity of both of these great Oriental empires, but maintain that cordial relationship so essential to the future of both and to the peace of the world.

In some quarters here tonight the concluding portion of the statement was pointed to as being capable of the construction that the United States Government was inclined to believe that the Japanese demands would contribute to the prosperity of both Japan and China. If that is the meaning of the department this assertion is bound to bring criticism from Americans in China and a considerable body of people in this country who have a deep interest in the welfare of the Oriental republic as well as in the preservation of the rights that have been granted to the United States in its dealings with China.

No reason for issuing the statement was given and it can merely be surmised that the purpose of the Government was to make some explanation of its attitude toward the Japanese-Chinese negotiations at this critical time after having remained silent throughout the period of three months when Japan was pressing her demands at Peking, and China was hoping for some sort of assistance from the United States, the only great power not involved in war and able to act the part of a friend.

No Mediation Plan.

A few hours prior to issuing his formal statement, Secretary Bryan said that it was not true, as stated in a newspaper of Tokio, that the United States was endeavoring to mediate between Japan and China. With reference to the cabled report that Japan had delivered an ultimatum to China, Mr. Bryan said that the State Department had no such information. In making these statements Mr. Bryan confirmed a Washington dispatch in THE NEW YORK TIMES today dealing with reports concerning American mediation and a Japanese ultimatum. Mr. Bryan had heretofore declined to discuss for publication in any way the matter of the negotiations between the two Oriental nations, in which this Government is reported to have taken a rather prominent part.

Announcement that a formal statement on the subject of the Oriental crisis would be issued tonight by the State Department came soon after visits of Viscount Chinda, the Japanese Ambassador, and Kai Fu Shah, the Chinese Minister, to Secretary Bryan. Viscount Chinda was with the Secretary of State for more than an hour. Nothing could be learned as to the purpose of these visits, but it was suggested that Mr. Bryan had called the two diplomats to the department to hand them copies of the statement that he issued tonight.

It is apparent from the formal statement that the United States Government has been cognizant of the terms of the Japanese demands since their delivery or since shortly thereafter.

The State Department has also been kept informed in regard to the progress of negotiations by Paul S. Reinsch, the American Minister at Peking.

Significance is attached here to the fact that Minister Reinsch is to return to the United States. This became known today. The official explanation is that Mr. Reinsch is merely coming home on leave of absence, but it is considered strange that he should leave his post at this critical time in the history of China, with all that a war would mean to the many Americans in that country.

BRITAIN EXPECTS ADJUSTMENT

No Fears There That United States May Be Drawn In.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 6.—Despite insistent reports to the contrary, THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent learns tonight on unquestionable authority that no ultimatum has yet been presented by Japan to China on the former's demands, following their long period of negotiations. While secrecy is maintained by Sir Edward Grey as to the information given him by the Japanese Government, THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent is assured that the British Foreign Office is quite satisfied that the whole affair between Japan and China will be diplomatically adjusted.

So far as the negotiations have now gone between the two Oriental nations, the Foreign Office knows nothing that makes it believe the ultimate outcome will be anything but amicable. While China's reply to the modified demands of Japan is not entirely satisfactory to the latter, further negotiations, there is reason to believe, will adjust the existing points of contention.

It may further be stated that in the circles best qualified to form an opinion here, fears that have been expressed of the Chino-Japanese situation requiring active intervention by the United States are considered quite unjustified. British and American interests in China practically follow the same lines, and it is understood that both the London and Washington Governments have received full assurances that the territorial integrity of China and the open door will remain safe at Japan's hands.

British diplomacy, on the other hand, is not shutting its eyes to the facts that such reports as have been made public of the character of the Japanese demands on China and the mystery surrounding the negotiations have together caused considerable disquiet in influential British quarters with special interest in China. Such action as the Washington Government is taking in the matter is individual, and it is inferred here that Washington sees no more reason for alarm than does London.

No communication on the subject has been received here since February last, when Washington made certain inquiries, which presumably would have been repeated had the State Department not been thoroughly well acquainted with the facts of a situation which has given rise to the recent alarming reports.

At the American Embassy today THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent learned that the embassy shared the feeling of the Foreign Office in expecting the trouble to be settled. The Japanese Embassy today preserved a sphinxlike silence. Inquiry about the ultimatum only brought a shake of the head from the Ambassador's secretary. The Ambassador resolutely declined to talk.

WAR MOVES IN MUKDEN.

Japanese Troops Take Up Positions—Hankow Prepares for Siege.

MUKDEN, (via Peking,) May 6.—The Japanese Consular orders issued on May 3 resulted in a general flight of Japanese from Mukden the following day. The value of a gold yen increased thirty silver cents and a rich harvest was reaped by exchange brokers. All Japanese civilians except a few bankers and railway officials now have left the city.

All classes of Chinese view the exodus with stolid indifference, not insulting or molesting in any way the persons leaving the city. Although the natives are deeply perturbed the city remains absolutely quiet.

Japanese troops occupy strategic positions in Mukden, while [illegible] soldiers are reported to be moving [illegible] to the south of the city. Many of the residents in that district are coming north.

HANKOW, (via Peking,) May 5.—The Japanese barracks here have been prepared for a siege. Following the Consul's advice many Japanese have left the city, although the Chinese appear wholly indifferent. Several prominent native residents were entertained at dinner last night by some of the leading Japanese citizens.

JAPAN'S AIMS IN DOUBT.

Shailer Mathews Suggests an Asiatic Monroe Doctrine.

CHICAGO, May 6.—Shailer Mathews, Dean of the University of Chicago, who spent the month of February in Japan as an emissary of the Cederal Council of the Churches of Christ in America in the interests of a better understanding between the two countries, issued the following statement here today:

"Just how far Japan is planning to build up a sort of Asiatic Monroe Doctrine the future alone will enable us to see. Even if we knew the entire plan of Japan we should still need to form conclusions with great hesitancy. Our first attitude should be to understand; then, if necessary, to criticise.

"To bein in any sense a duplication of our Monroe Dictrine, Japan's policy for China should content itself with protecting China from being exploited and dismembered by European powers. That China is exposed to such danger is evident from her recent history. Further, in this danger to China, Japan undoubtedly sees danger for her own development, just as the United States sees danger in further European colonization in political control of the American continents. In thus protecting China, Japan would undoubtedly gain great commercial advantages, to which she may be said to be fairly entitled, in view of her geographical situation. But if Japan plans to control China politically, and if, while maintaining a technical integrity of the republic, she makes use of commercial concessions as excuses for interference with Chinese policies, she will be very far off from duplicating in Asia the Monroe Doctrine of America.

"Time alone can show whether Japan is to be moved by truly great statesmanship or whether she is to follow the short-sighted policy of taking advantage of the present European cituation to profit at the expense of China's weakness. * * * I feel that Japan has quite as much at stake in her policy as has China. At the very least, she will be determining what estimate the world at large is to put upon explicit promises of her statemens."

PREDICTS A WORLD WAR.

Professor Kuno Meyer Says United States Will Be Drawn In.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 6.—Prediction that a world-wide war was drawing near and that the United States would be drawn into it was made this afternoon by Professor Kuno Meyer.

Asked whether he thought China and Japan would go to war, Dr. Meyer said:

"I think so. This will be a whole century of wars. China and Japan will fight. The war will extend to the Indian and the Pacific Oceans. America will be drawn into it, despite her efforts to remain neutral. In fact, it will be a world-wide war between the white and the yellow races, as my Emperor has expressed it.

"This is a golden opportunity for Japan. She realizes that the European nations cannot interfere with her and that America will not. Those who think the statemen of various countries are suffering from an aberration will change their minds later on. It will be a question of superiority. There are so many underlying reasons for the great war that is to come that it will take a great deal of time to explain it all.

"It will not be a question of Belgium. Nor will it be a question of Serbia, nor will it be a question of Alsace and Lorraine. Enormous interests are at stake. The nations will fight for commercial development, and finally against England's control of the seas. That is one reason for the present war. Germany will not stand for it.

"America will try to remain neutral. Nations will gradually encroach upon her rights, and the United States Government will have to fight to protect her own interests."

PROFESSOR ANESAKI'S VIEWS.

Can't Indorse Japan's Policy if Reports Are True.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 6.—Masaharu Anesaki, exchange professor at Harvard from the University of Tokio, said today that he believed that the seeming crisis in the relations between Japan and China would prove to be merely "a passing phase," and that the questions at issue would reach a peaceful solution through diplomacy.

"I cannot believe," he said, "the reports of the high-handed manner in which Japan is said to have forced her demands upon China. If these reports are true I personally cannot indorse the Japanese policy."

Arrested as Drug Traffickers.

Detectives Charles Grand and Samuel Massan of Dope Squad 3 saw at Broadway and Forty-sixth Street last night a man whom they had been seeking as a cocaine peddler. They said he was approached by another man who said "Sell me some quick, or I'll die." The loon detectives followed the two men into a saloon on Forty-sixth Street near Eighth Avenue where, they said, they saw the sale consummate. The men were taken to the West Forty-seventh Street Police Station, where the alleged drug seller gave the name of John Sheehan, 305 Columbus Avenue. The other said he was Arthur Staffinger, 8 West 109th Street. Seven "decks" of cocaine were found on Sheehan, who was charged with selling narcotics. Staffinger was charged with having habit-forming drugs in his possession.

business concern become public property. He sat with his back to the jury and the witness chair and dictated notes and instructions to Mr. Ivins's private secretary, Miss Cassie Doran.

Justice Andrews carried out his plan of adjourning at 4 o'clock in order to ease the strain on the lawyers, jurors, and others connected with the case. Mr. Bowers said tonight he did not expect to conclude his case before early next week. Today's proceedings ended with an expert printer, Henry J. Home, Chief of the Bureau of Printing of Columbia University, on the stand. Mr. Bowers expects to prove by him and another expert that the prices charged by the J. B. Lyon Company for public printing were greatly excessive and that the work done was inferior.

Gilbert C. Bishop, who was bookkeeper for the Albany Journal Company until two years ago and who is supposed to have an intimate knowledge of the business affairs of Mr. Barnes's publications, arrived here tonight. The Roosevelt counsel had tried to find Mr. Bishop for months, and the other day it was asserted in court that he had disappeared. As the only other person connected with the Journal Company who had an intimate knowledge of its affairs during the time under question, Mr. Lindsay, was dead, the Roosevelt counsel despaired of getting any witnesses to help them and were convinced that they must rely entirely upon the books of the concern. Mr. Bishop is expected to reveal secrets that the Roosevelt counsel could not possibly get in any other way.

Barnes and Albany Vice.

When court opened this morning Justice Andrews cautioned the jurors against reading newspaper accounts of the court proceedings, and asked them if they had read anything about the case since the trial started. Each one said he had not.

The session ended last night with Colonel Roosevelt being asked about conditions in Albany County and city, and this morning his counsel, Mr. Bowers, began a long argument that such testimony should be admitted as bearing both on the question of malice and on mitigation of the alleged libel, as it had been charged that Mr. Barnes and Charles F. Murphy had entered into a political alliance. After citing a number of authorities Mr. Bowers said:

"Mr. Roosevelt will, if allowed, testify that he was informed that for many years Mr. Barnes had been building up an organization and machine in the City and County of Albany in alliance with one McCabe, who was the recognized organization Democratic leader in Albany, so that the two together might strengthen the organization of the other. We have been shown from the start of this trial that what we would have to prove would be conspiracy—an alliance between Mr. Barnes and Mr. Murphy, but we feel that we have a right to show that Mr. Barnes was cognizant of a state of corruption existing and in acts of corruption performed in the City and County of Albany and to show that Mr. Barnes, in spite of protests made to him of existing conditions, had obtained positions for his own followers in gambling houses in that city."

Mr. Bowers read from the Colonel's article of which Mr. Barnes complains the reference to the "moral and political" resemblance between Mr. Barnes and Mr. Murphy, and went on:

"If there is a domination of New York State by Mr. Barnes and Mr. Murphy that domination exists as well in the furthest hamlet as in the great metropolis. I had believed until your Honor's rulings that almost any article which had a bearing on the question of malice should be admitted in evidence, and I now ask that you will extend the ruling recently made by permitting Mr. Roosevelt to give what he has been told as to an alliance existing in regard to conditions in Albany."

Court Rules for Barnes.

Justice Andrews ruled against allowing the evidence in question to be presented. He said:

"This is a question bearing entirely on the question of damages. I agree with you that the defendant has a right to give any evidence of any kind which will show that he believed that the charges when he made them were true. He may tell of anything which was said to him, or anything which he read, or anything which he learned from any source which led him to so believe.

"But, with regard to the admission of facts, they must have a direct bearing upon the accusations made. In this manner I believe that any information which Colonel Roosevelt may have received in regard to local affairs in the city and county of Albany, no matter whether he believed them or not, are immaterial and should not be received."

The jury, which had been excluded from the room during the argument, was brought back, and Mr. Roosevelt was recalled to the stand.

"At the time this article appeared there was an election coming on?" asked Mr. Bowers.

"A primary election in September and a general election in November," replied the Colonel. "In the Republican primaries the candidates for Governor were Messrs. Hinman, Whitman, and Hedges; in the Democratic primaries Messrs. Glynn and Hennessy, and—do you want me to name those mentioned in the Progressive primaries?"

"Oh, yes, that is still historical," said Mr. Ivins.

The Colonel named the Progressive candidates. Then Justice Andrews asked Mr. Ivins if he cared to cross-examine the witness.

"I don't know that I care to have anything more to do with Mr. Roosevelt," said Mr. Ivins with a smile. The Colonel looked startled, and what was almost a groan went through the courtroom. Many women had appeared, attracted by the prospect of another duel of wits between Roosevelt and Ivins. The Colonel reluctantly left the stand, and then, as if discovering an oversight, mentioned the fact that William Sulzer also had been a Gubernatorial candidate.

"Oh, we'll concede that he ran," said Mr. Ivins.

Fred C. Foster, Secretary of the State Printing Board, was recalled merely to say that the printing contract awarded to Oliver A. Quayle was performed in the plant of the J. B. Lyon Company, to the best of his knowledge, and that the Quayle Company had no plant of its own.

Delve in Journal Books.

The Roosevelt lawyers then took up the question of going into the books of The Albany Journal Company to show records of payments to or money received from The Argus Company and the J. B. Lyon Company. Mr. Ivins was asked to make certain concessions in order to save time, but he objected on the ground that an effort was being made to get Mr Barnes's private accounts mixed up with the others.

Stewart F. Hancock, local counsel for the Colonel, then asked to have admitted in evidence a list of the State contracts for departmental and legislative printing for he last fifteen years and also for the printing of the session laws for the same period. Mr. Ivins was asked if he would concede that on certain dates the Journal Company made payments to the Lyon and Argus Companies and that Mr. Barnes knew of the transactions.

"We will agree to nothing that these gentlemen ask," replied Mr. Ivins with some heat. "They are delving into our books and taking out whatever they want and taking an unfair advantage of us."

Mr. Bowers was on his feet immediately.

"No advantage is being taken of any one," he declared.

"You are doing that very thing now in the next room," shouted Mr. Ivins.

"You have the privilege of going on the stand and showing the court and jury if I have done so," Mr. Bowers retorted.

Justice Andrews ended the quarrel, and William J. Nussbaum, a certified public accountant who had examined the Journal books, was recalled to identify the dividend account running from April, 1908, to April, 1913, and the dividend check book, showing that all checks were signed by Mr. Barnes, thus proving that he had a knowledge of what was going on in the Journal office.

Mr. Ivins was willing to stipulate that the dividend checks were countersigned by Mr. Barnes as far back as April 10, 1901, but he objected to the matter being put in evidence, contending that it was not material. He was overruled, and the witness, with the help of Mr. Bowers, brought out the dividends for the five-year period.

Frequent "Melons" Cut.

The list showed that, besides the regular quarterly dividends, special ones were declared at the beginning of each year. The regular dividend, each quarter was $3,125, of which Mr. Barnes received $2,020 as his share. The first "melon" was cut on Jan. 11, 1909, the total being $13,125, of which Mr. Barnes received $8,080. Again, on July 10, 1909, Mr. Barnes received an extra share of $4,040. On Dec. 21, 1909 he received an extra 20 per cent. dividend, or $16,160. On Jan. 11, 1911, he received an additional $12,120. On Dec. 28, 1911 he received $6,060.

Mr. Barnes's regular dividends for the five-year period amounted to $40,400 and his extra dividends $46,460, making his total $86,860.

The next hour was taken up with an examination of the books regarding profit and loss, credit and other items. It all seemed a hopeless snarl, but when the lawyers got through Justice Andrews made one of his clearcut summings up. Addressing the Roosevelt counsel, he said:

"Now, let's see what you've got. You've got the fact that Mr. Barnes countersigned all dividend checks, and that dividend checks were transferred by some one to the ledger. You have got also the fact that the dividend credits were transferred from the profit and loss account and that the profit and loss account was referred in the books to the job printing account. Your contention is that Mr. Barnes had knowledge of this job printing account, because he countersigned these checks, and because, as President of the Journal Company, the by-laws requested him to have supervision. Now, what authority have you for bringing these books into evidence? We'll take a recess until 2 o'clock, and take the matter up then."

At the opening of the afternoon session William H. Van Benschoten of the Roosevelt counsel offered in evidence the minute book of the Journal Company, entries in which, made by the late John D. Lindsay, Secretary of the company, showed that Mr. Barnes had been present at the Directors' meetings. Mr. Barnes's counsel made one of their vigorous fights to keep it out. The court said:

"I question how far the minute books of a corporation are competent evidence against a third party. The book does not show that Mr. Barnes was present. It merely shows that Mr. Lindsay, who is now dead, said he was present. If you have any authorities I shall be glad to see them."

Minute Book Admitted.

Mr. Van Benschoten produced decisions in several similar cases, and the justice finally said: "I am inclined to think the evidence is competent."

The minutes showed that from 1897 to 1914 Mr. Barnes, as president of the company, was authorized to assign to the Albany County Bank various claims the company had against the State for printing; to receive and pay out money and to indorse checks and warrants. Dozens of such resolutions were read, during which a listlessness came over the court room. Mr. Ivins apparently fell asleep, Colonel Roosevelt read his magazine and the jurors yawned.

The next matter Mr. Bowers took up was the assignment of Mr. Barnes's salary claim of $20,000 for two years against James B. Lyon to The Journal Company. The reading of the resolution awoke the courtroom to new life. Mr. Barnes was seemingly perturbed. His lawyers worked hard to keep the matter out of the record. Finally Mr. Ivins agreed to submit that the assignment of the $20,000 claim was made in accordance with the resolution. He was asked to stipulate that it was an accurate transcript of the records.

"We do not," he replied. "We stipulate that it is on the minutes, nothing more."

Mr. Bowers had won his point in getting the matter before the jury and into the record, and now he turned to the report of the Bayne Committee that investigated Albany conditions, calling to the stand Arthur G. Warner, an Albany lawyer, who was associate counsel to the Bayne Committee. Testimony was read given by Michael V. Dolan before the Bayne Committee, in which he was asked if he believed it was fair to the City of Albany and of financial advantage to The Argus Company for The Argus Company to pay to The Journal Company 15 per cent. commission on all work it obtained from The Journal Company, and then the witness was asked if Mr. Barnes was present at the time and heard the evidence given. Mr. Bowers said he wanted to show that Mr. Barnes was present when Dolan's testimony was given and hence had full knowledge of the payments made, and that consequently it was his duty at that time to stop them.

"This examination is unfair," shouted Mr. Ivins. "Mr. Barnes was not permitted to have counsel at that investigation."

Mr. Bowers objected to such a remark being made before the jury. The court, after argument, decided to strike out the entire matter. Mr. Bowers remarked: "I merely wanted to show that in that year Mr. Barnes certainly knew from the testimony given that these commissions had been paid, as I guess I have shown it."

Burd Corroborates Hotchkiss.

The next witness was George B. Burd of Buffalo, who was Chairman of the Senate Committee on Printing at a time when William H. Hotchkiss was State Superintendent of Insurance. Mr. Burd testified that certain bills to change the law so as to diminish the amount of State printing had been introduced in the Legislature, but that the bills never had been reported out of Committee. Mr. Ivins's cross-examination was brief.

Q.—Did Mr. Barnes ever talk to you in any way, directly or indirectly, about these bills? A.—He did not.

Q.—Did you ever talk to Mr. Barnes about any bills? A.—I did not.

Mr. Hancock then offered in evidence reports of the State Printing Board since 1899, and sought to show that Mr. Barnes had dealings with the members of the Board, made up of the Controller, the Attorney General, and the Secretary of State. Mr. Ivins said that if the Justice allowed the matter in evidence it would be necessary to call as witnesses all the members of every State Printing Board during the time in question.

The last witness was Henry J. Home, the printing expert. He had barely started to testify when the court adjourned until tomorrow morning.

HAIL DR. JACOBI AS LEADER.

200 Physicians Honor Him at Eighty-fifth Birthday Dinner.

Dr. Abraham Jacobi's eighty-fifth birthday was celebrated at a dinner given by the medical staff of the Bronx Hospital last night, which was attended by more than 200 members of the medical profession and their wives. Dr. Jacobi was hailed as one of the greatest leaders today in the field of medicine.

Dr. James P. Warbasse, the toastmaster, told how Dr. Jacobi had been born in Westphalia, Germany, educated at the University of Bonn; how he had spent a year and a half in a Prussian prison after his arrest in connection with the revolutionary movement in Germany at the time, and how he had come to this country sixty-two years ago. Dr. Warbasse said that Dr. Jacobi was a pioneer in the movement against child labor and against the overworking of women. The writings of Dr. Jacobi, he said, had showed more clearly than anything else on the subject the economic waste due to the overworking of women.

Nathan Straus said that his own work for the saving of lives of children through the pasteurization of milk had been done under the inspiration and guidance of Dr. Jacobi and would never have been accomplished without Dr. Jacobi.

Dr. S. W. Lambert, Dean of the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Columbia University, said the guest of the evening had been the leader of many reform movements and that he had been invariably in the right.

Acting Mayor George McAneny, a son-in-law of Dr. Jacobi, told how the death rate among children had been cut down in recent years and he said that Dr. Jacobi had played a great part in it. Dr. S. S. Goldwater, Commissioner of Health, said that Dr. Jacobi's work could be clearly seen in the reduction of the death rate in the city.

Other speakers were Dr. M. Aronson, Dr. W. J. Robinson, Dr. H. Edwin Lewis, and Dr. Alexander Goldman. A bas-relief of himself was presented to Dr. Jacobi at the conclusion of the dinner.

To Arrest Those Who Litter Parks.

In order to facilitate the prosecution of persons who litter parks with refuse, paper, or rubbish, the Magistrates' Courts will sit next Saturday and Sunday from 3 until 6 o'clock in the afternoon. Chief Magistrate McAdoo yesterday assigned Magistrates to sit in West Farms Court, near the Bronx Park; West Side Court, near Riverside Park; Harlem Court, near Mount Morris Park, and Yorkville Court, near Central Park.

URGES STATE BOARD OF CENTRAL CONTROL

FIVE MEN TO CHECK UP

Proposal of Delaney, Ousted Democratic Official—Radical Rearrangement of Departments Favored.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 6.—The Committee on Governor and Other State Officers of the Constitutional Convention at its first meeting today received recommendations for the creation of a Central Board of Control in the State Government to have supervision over the letting of contracts, the purchase of supplies and the preparation of the budget, and for the grouping of the administrative activities of the State in nineteen departments to replace the 169 departments, commissions and bureaus now in existence.

John H. Delaney of Brooklyn, former Commissioner of Efficiency and Economy, appeared before the committee as the advocate of these reforms. Mr. Delaney was ousted from office by the present Republican Legislature after a bill abolishing his department, which had been recommended by Governor Whitman, had passed the Legislature. He came before the committee today at teh invitation of the convention, which is controlled by the Republicans quite as overwhelmingly as is the Legislature. Mr. Delaney talked for nearly two hours to the committee. When he finished, Republican State Chairman Frederick C. Tanner, who happens also to be Chairman of the committee, put through a vote of thanks to the former Democratic official.

Mr. Tanner's committee is more commonly known as the Short Ballot Committee.

The Central Board of Control, as Mr. Delaney conceives it, would be composed of five men, elected as are the Regents now at a join session of both branches of the Legislature.

"It might be suggested that the Governor should appoint them," said Mr. Delaney, "and I do not say that he should not have the power of appointing them, but the Governor surely should not have the power of removal over the members of the board. Taking everything into consideration, I think the other plan of having them elected by the Legislature is safer. They should be men of conscience and of common sense and should be removed beyond the possibility of political control or coercion. Even Governors have proved themselves at times too amenable to political influences for the good of the State."

"And, pray, where could you find five such men to take the jobs?" asked Patrick W. Cullinan of Oswego, one of the Republican Delegates at Large, with a smile of incredulity.

"Oh, the men could be found, all right," said Mr. Delaney. "I have abundant faith in human nature. I have found the average for integrity and capability among men pretty high. I tried to do my best when in office. And, let me add, while I found now and then a subordinate who ought to be removed, I can testify that a majority of the department heads were loyal to the best interests of the State as a rule. I found lots of confusion, many mistakes, and much waste; but I found very few crooks in the State service."

Mr. Delaney urged this distribution of the State activities:

1—Legislature.
2—Executive.
3—Secretary of State.
4—Controller.
5—Treasurer.
6—Attorney General.
7—Judiciary.
8—Board of Control.
9—Department of Banking and Insurance.
10—Department of Taxes and Revenues.
11—Department of Public Welfare.
12—Department of Public Utilities.
13—Department of Education.
14—Department of Elections.
15—Department of State Militia.
16—Department of Agriculture and Conservation.
17—Department of Public Institutions.
18—Department of Public Works.
19—Department of Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. Delaney expressed the opnon that the State Engineer should be the head of an adequate engineering bureau in the Departmnt of Pubic Works. All the functions of inspection which now are scattered through a number of departments, he thought, should be consolidated to prevent overlapping and annoyance to the owners of establishments which are subject to inspection. The Labor Department and the State Department of Health, under the present plan of government, each has inspection as one of its most important dutes.

"The Health Department inspects milk, the Agricultural Department inspects butter. Is there any reason why one department should not perform both of thee functions?" asked Mr. Delaney.

"There would be no such confuson under my plan," he contnued, "because the Labor Department and the Health Department would both be mportant divsons in the Department of Public Welfare."

"Do you think that the entire list of departments as laid out by you ought to be written into the Constitution?" asked ex-Secretary of War Stimson, who is a member of the committee.

"I do," said Mr. Delaney. "If you don't you will soon find that the Legislature would get to work and extend the list ad infinitum, as it has in the past, and possibly rearrange the entire plan. Experience justifies that opinion."

Another member of the committee thought that this plan would place tod many difficulties in the way of the Legislature's efforts to meet changing conditions.

"I have no such fear," said Mr. Delaney. "Let us look backward twenty years. Only one really important department has been created in that time for carrying out a new State policy—that of the supervision of public service corporations."

President Schurman of Cornell, Mr. Stimson, Chairman Tanner and half a dozen other men who will figure prominently in the deliberations of the Constitutional Convention piled Mr. Delaney with questions. Mr. Stimson thought the creation of a Board of Control, not directly answerable to the Governor involved a drastice change.

"This board would have power to overrule the Governor in some matters," said Mr. Stimson. "It would virtually create two governments of the State of New York."

"My point is that these men should be independent and beyond every form of coercion," said Mr. Delaney. "The Governor under the present system has or reject an item in the appropriation bill, but he cannot reduce it. In this respect his hands are tied now. The Board of Control should have the right to reduce items."

President Schurman asked Mr. Delaney why it would not be a good plan to have the Board of Control composed of the Governor and the members of the Cabinet he would have if the short ballot plan were adopted.

"No," was the reply. "These men would have the spending of money which is provided in the budget. The Board of Control would be expected to check up the expenditures in the interest of economy. The Board of Control should be independent and as it were stand outside of the Government or at least occupy a middle position between the appropriating power—the Legislature—and the departments which spend the money which the Legislature appropriates.

"Besides, you cannot make men run their own departments and an Efficiency Bureau at the same time and make a good job of it."

Mr. Delaney said that the Board of Control should have powers approximating those of the Board of Estimate in the New York City Government. It should have the necessary machinery to investigate demands for appropriations and the terms of contracts, as well as to test the quality of supplies purchaed by the State and the reasonableness of the prices.

"The Governor and the State officials do not, as a rule," he said, "know anything about such technical matters. Look, for instance, at our printing contracts. The State spends twice as much as it should spend for printing because there is no one who knows anything about the business with the power to check up these contracts, and because each department is permitted to its own buying of stationery and because of the absence of any standardization of supplies or uniformity of specifications."

MAY REDRAW DISTRICTS.

Convention Insurgents to Fight for Senate Reapportionment.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., May 6.—A clique among Republican delegates to the Constitutional Convention mostly from up-State districts is planning to force the convention to undertake before its adjourns a new reapportionment of the Senate districts. The report came today as a surprise to President Root and other leaders.

It was learned tonight that ex-Senator Edgar T. Brackett of Saratoga, who has shewn unmistakable symptoms of insurgency, is the leader of this new movement. The members of the Committee on the Legislatur and its Organization, of which he is Chairman, at a secret meeting held this week, practically reached an agreement in the matter. Senator Root is opposd to this plan, or to any other project that would tend to lend a political color to the convention.

A number of the leading delegates are known to be in thorough accord with Mr. Root. Nothing could arouse political passion to a great degree than the reapportionment project of Senator Brackett and his following. The leaders of the convention admitted with much concern tonight that the movement had gathered considerable strength.

The present State Constitution in Section 4 of Article III., provides that there shall be a reappointment of Senate districts by the Legislature in the yaer following the State census of every ten years. A census will be taken in this month and next, and under the circumstances the reappointment should be left to next year's Legislature.

The consensus at the Capitol tonight was that nothing but fear that the Assembly elections this Fall would result in a Democratic victory could have inspired the proposed action of Senator Brackett and his friends. The present Senate Districts were mapped out by a Republican Legislature, and are all that the Republicans could desire from a partisan point of view.

Should the men behind the reapportionment project succeed in forcing their plan through, it is almost certain that the present Constitutional Convention will be compelled to remain in session until late in September, a situation which Senator Root and other leaders that they could get together on a revised constitution before they are called upon to pass their verdict.

Secretary of State Hugo said today that the results of the census would not be available in tabulated form before Sept. 1, and any new reapportionment must be based on those figures. The revised Constitution must be promulgated and the Constitutional Convention adjourn at the six weeks prior to election, or action by the voters on the revsed Constituton must ge over for another year.

To meet the requirements of the law theh present Constitutional Convention must adjourn not later than Sept. 20. If Senator Root could have his way, the final adjournment would be reached in the latter part of August.

The question of equitable representation for New York City in the Legislature will come up in connection with any attempt to undertake a Senate reapportionment. Under the present Constitution the City of New York with fully half of the population of the State, is barred from having a majority in either branch of the Legislature. The Democratic delegates from New York now are preparing for a fight on what they regard as an unjust discrimination against the city.

PRAISE WAGNER AT DINNER.

Friends Nominate Senate Leader for Governor.

Seven hundred persons crowded into Yorkville Casino, in East Eighty-sixth Street last evening, and as many more tried in vain to get in to attend the dinner in honor of State Senator Robert F. Wagner, minority leader of the Senate. Wagner was praised and lauded and a diamond ring was presented to him from his friends in the Twenty-second Assembly District, and then Senator Bernard Patten of Queens declared that he hoped to see Wagner the next Governor.

James M. Holland, Vice President of the State Federation of Labor, who said he had been asked by the Federation to extend its heartfelt thanks to Wagner and to Assemblyman Alfred E. Smith, pointed to an electric sign over the speakers' table blazing forth "Our Bob," and declared that the Federation meant now to make Wagner "Our Bob, too."

Abram I. Elkus said that it was a high compliment that sluch a demonstration should be made so long after Wagner had begun his services in the Senate. Usually, he said, dinners had to be given soon after the honored one's election , and he added, referring to Governor Whitman:

"If the admirers of the man who now holds the highest office of the State got together at this time to give him a dinner there wouldn't be a corporal's guard present."

Mr. Holland attacked Mayor Mitchel's administration, recalling the request of the Mayor to employers last Winter not to cut down forces when lack of work would effect such hardship, and declaring that the Mayor then reduced the city payrolls.

Maurice Block, who is 25 years old and the youngest member of the Assembly, presided and among those present were Charles F. Murphy, Edward E. McCall, Thomas F. Smith, Senator Boylan, Justice Moss and Alderman Edward V. Gilmore, who presented the diamond ring. Ex-Governor Glynn telegraphedy regrets because of his wife's illness.

Jewish Publication Society to Meet.

The annual meeting of the Jewish Publication Society of America will be held at Dropsie College, Philadelphia, on Sunday, May 18. Addresses will be delivered by Professor Max L. Margolis and Horace Stern. The society announces the forthcoming publication of a new English translation of the Bible, the annual American Jewish Year Book, and of Max Radins history of the Jews among the Greeks and Romans.

CREDITORS DIVIDED ON SIEGEL'S OFFER

MAY LET COURT DECIDE

Many Assert Sum Put Forward Doesn't Constitute a "Substantial" Payment.

Some 200 creditors of the bank of Henry Siegel met last night in the University Settlement, 184 Eldridge Street, to consider the offer of Mr. Siegel to pay them $150,000 on account. There was much disorder at the meeting, as many persons tried to speak at the same time, and the Chairman, A. Schwartz, rapped in vain for order. The purpose of the gathering was to put before the depositors the result of the meeting between Mr. Siegel and a committee appointed to receive his offer. It was said by some of those present last night that they suspected that influences were at work to "upset plans already made." The creditors were divided in opinion also as to whether Mr. Siegel should go to jail or the depositors should save part of their deposits from the wreck of the Siegel enterprise.

No definite decision was made as to accepting the $150,000. Though the offer was not turned down it was thought likely that the matter would be left to Justice Clark of the Supreme Court of Geneseo, N. Y. A suggestion was also made that the money received should be used in insuring Siegel's life for a large amount, and for the benefit of his creditors. This suggestion received but scant hearing.

The first person to report last night was Henry Hagmaier, a member of the committee which received the Siegel offer in the office of Stanchfield & Levy, counsel for Siegel. He asked Mr. Levy whether if the the offer was accepted Mr. Siegel would apply for discharge in bankruptcy and he was assured that Mr. Siegel would no nothing of the sort. Of the suggestion that a committee should be appointed to take the money and to see that it was distributed to the best advantage, Mr. Hagmaier said he thought it would be wise to ask Justice Clark first whethe he considered the sum as complying with his stipulation made after Siegel's conviction that he must make a substantial settlement with his creditors.

"A substantial amount is 15 per cent. a depositor called out.

At this many persons tried to talk at onc and Mr. Schwartz had trouble in restoring order.

Irving L. Coons went with Mrs. Emmeline Baker to the Hotel Majestic to see Mr. Siegel, and he told of that visit. Frequently he was interrupted, and more than once his version of what transpired was questioned. He said his object was to try to get Siegel to increase his offer. He reported that Siegel had admitted he knew the amount was n ota" dro p in the bucket." But he asserted the convicted merchant had said it was the best he could do, and was only possible because friends bad come to his assistance.

"He pays $75 a week for his rooms?" shouted a depositor, and again Mr. Schwartz had to restore order.

Mr. Coons said that Siegel told him that if his offer was accepted within thirty days he would be in business and would issue certificates to depositors the holders needed to dispose of them.

"If Henry Siegel goes to jail, then your chances are gone entirely!" shouted Coons above the din.

It was then W. Doyle who said he suspected that an influence was at work to upset plans for a settlement. Some one then put a motion to appoint a committee of five to handle the affair. Then another suggested a committee of ten.

It was only by persistent effort that William Henkel, Jr., who is counsel for the depositors, could get a hearing. He advised them to accept the $150,000 offer.

"What will you do?" he asked.

The answer came promptly: "Let him go to jail."

"Let's get our money," others called out, and for several seconds the contending parties shouted.

"If Siegel goes to the court and says he offered the depositors $150,000, and to devote a share of his earning to pay them, and they wouldn't accept his terms, don't you think they will be merciful with him?" asked Mr. Henkel.

"What do you want? To see him go to jail or to get the money?"

Shouts of "jail, jail," were mingled with cries for money.

Mrs. Emmeline Baker gave it as her opinion that the offer should not be accepted. She said that she had told Justice Clark that he was wrong in not naming an amount when he specified that Siegel was to have a chance to redeem his promise to make a substantial payment to the creditors. She said the Justice had told her that 15 per cent. was a substantial sum and that unless Siegel made such a payment he would go to the penitentiary.

"I believe if you hold out we will get more," she said.

At this point the arguments became general and those in attendance found groups arguing violently. Mr. Schwarts told the newspaper reporters that he wanted it made clear that a majority of the depositors were in favor of accepting the Siegel offer, but the meeting closed without any action on the proposal. There will be another meeting on May 20.

Two Railroad Men Battle for Life in a Baggage Car.

PASAIC, N. J., May 6.—Two trainmen on an Erie Railroad express this afternoon had a fight for their lives with a bull dog in the baggage car as the train was passing through Rutherford. The dog suddenly attacked the trainmen, who grabbed clubs and beat the animal off. hile one of them cowed the dog in a corner of the car, the other threw open the side door, and then they hurled him from the train.

The dog then ran through Rutherford, attacking several dogs and snapping at a number of children, until policeman Fisher shot the animal. The head was sent this afternoon to the Board of Health at Trenton to determine whether the animal was rabbid. It is said the dog was consigned eo a wealthy woman in Suffern, N. Y. There was no license tag or other mark of identification on the dog's collar.

City's Light Bill Cut $75,000.

Commissioner Williams of the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity announced yestesday that a saving of $74,000 had been effected in the lighting of public buildings in the first three months of the year. This was accomplished by enlisting the aid of employes, especially janitors, in checking waste, and by replacing gaslights by tngsten lamps; 1,800 arc lamps on metered service were also replaced by nitrogen lamps.

URGE GIRLS' REFORM SCHOOL

Educators Seek Constitutional Amendment to Provide for One.

At a conference of the Public Educational Association o nthe subject of delinquent children, held last night at the Russel Sage Foundation, 130 East Twenty-second Street, Miss Olive M. Jones of Public School 120 said that, under the present system of studies in the public schools, the schools are making criminals of the children b yteaching them studies, which they are unfitted for or unwilling to learn. She suggested as the remedy that they should be prepraedl for dinsutries as eary as possible.

The meteing discusse the need for a constitutional amendment to provide for institutions, where delinquent girls may be sent for reform. At present, laws exist only for the care of delinquent boys.

IN ANOTHER ATTACK

NEW THREATS BY "RIPPER"

Mrs. Murray Collapses When Murder Letter Reaches Her as She Sits by Son's Coffin.

Beatrice Hunter, six years old, daughter of Hubert Hunter, 125 East Fiftieth Street, near Lexington Avenue, was seized and dragged into the vestibule of her home yesterday afternoon, a little after 4 o'clock, just as the body of little Charlie Murray, slain by a "ripper" in the hallway of his home, 270 First Avenue, last Monday night, was on its way to Calvary Cemetery.

The little girl was rescued by her mother, Mrs. Edna Hunter, who held her assailant and turned him over to a policeman of the East Fifty-first Street Station, called by a passing school boy.

The prisoner gave his name as Harry Newman, 16 years, a peddler, living at 419 East Fifty-sixth Street. He was found to have a peddler's badge and license and a knife, with one good blade 2 inches long and a larger blade broken off at the middle. At the police station Newman was questioned by detectives detailed to find the "ripper" who murdered Leonore Anna Cohn, in the hallway of her home, 352 Third Avenue, last March, and the Murray boy. He will be taken to Police Headquarters this morning and questioned further.

According to the police no evidence has been found against Newman to connect him with any other attack. He was held on charges made after Dr. Salzberg of Flower Hospital had treated Beatrice.

The little girl had not recovered from her fright last night when questioned by newspaper men. She is a pretty blue-eyed child with sunny hair cropped just above her shoulders, but she is frail and not in robust health. According to her mother she was operated on for appendicitis a little more than a year ago, and just before that she had a fall which broke her shoulder blade and impaired the use of her right arm.

Mother Near at Hand.

The father is a trainman on the New York Central Railroad, and had not returned home from work at the time of the attack. The mother works in a restaurant, the entrance of which is separated from the vestibule of the house by a thin partition. The Hunters live in a flat on the top floor.

At 4:30 o'clock Mrs. Hunter was seated at a table in the front of the restaurant, next to the dividing wall. At a table across from her sat Mrs. Nellie Cameron and her husband, George, who run the restaurant. Beatrice and Eunice Cameron, the four-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cameron, were playing on the sidewalk in front of the restaurant, and were partly hidden from their parents by an iron railing.

Mrs. Hunter and Mrs. Cameron first were attracted by the actions of two men on the other side of the street. They made motions with their hands and heads, as if they were trying to turn the attention of the two women toward the adjoining vestibule. Mrs. Hunter and Mrs. Cameron both mistook the actions of the men for an attempt to flirt, and paid no attention.

Then both mothers and Mr. Cameron were startled by the screams of Beatrice. Mrs. Hunter ran into the vestibule, where she found her daughter in the clutches of the strange young man, partly concealed from persons passing by half of the double door, which was closed.

The young man released the child when Mrs. Hunter demanded: "What are you doing in here?"

"I'm looking for a ball," he said as he stooped in another corner and pretended to search the floor.

"What business have you looking for a ball in this vestibule?" demanded Mrs. Hunter.

Accused by Angry Mother.

"I was playing in the street and the ball came in here," he replied as he broke for the door.

Mrs. Hunter grabbed his arm just as escape was barred by Mrs. Cameron, who braced herself at the door.

Mrs. Hunter, a woman of medium size, shook the youth as she questioned him further, while Beatrice crouched terrified in a corner.

"You were not looking for a ball in here," she said to her prisoner. "You came here to harm my little girl."

Meanwhile a crowd of men, women, and children had collected. Mrs. Hunter became impatient because no one moved to call the police. "If no one will call a policeman," she pleaded, "won't one of you men hold this fellow until I can get one?"

No one volunteered to hold the prisoner, but a crowd of school children came by, and a boy among them ran and brought a policeman, who took Mrs. Hunter's prisoner to the station.

The little girl told her mother that the young man had tried to drag her to the back of the hallway where her screams might not have been heard.

"While I was playing out here on the sidewalk," she said, "a man stopped and said he was a peddler. He wanted to get in the house, and asked me to show him the door bell. Then he caught me by the arm and pulled me into the hall."

Asked if she was not afraid of the man, she shook her head. She was playing with her little chum, Eunice, and almost within reach were their mothers, and there was nothing unusual about the man.

Another Ripper Warning.

Warning of another ripper murder was received in a letter yesterday morning by Mrs. Nicholas Murray as she sat weeping at the side of her little son's coffin. Following police instructions, Mr. Murray wrapped the letter carefully in paper to protect any fingerprints or other marks it might bear and turned it over to Captain Gildea. Deputy Commissioner Lord said there was little significance to the letter, but he refused to tell its contents.

But the letter was read carefully by Mr. and Mrs. Murray, and this is their recollection of it:

Dear Mrs. Murray: I really feel sorry for you, as I sit in my room here in this neighborhood and watch this crowd of [illegible] again. While I feel sorry for you, you must understand that I must see blood and cut flesh. These police can never get me. I have them guessing. Lovingly,

R. F. C.

The letter was enclosed in an envelope on the flap of which were written the initials "R. F. C." The name "R. F. Crane" written there, too, was crossed out. The letter was written in pencil. The handwriting and that in letters addressed to Mrs. Anna Cohn, foretelling the murder of Charlie Murray, are being compared by experts.

The envelope bore the postmark, "N. Y. S," the stamp of the Pennsylvania Station Post Office. It was mailed at 7:30 P. M. Wednesday. When Mrs. Murray read the first paragraph she collapsed.

A crowd of thousands gathered in First Avenue near the Murray home when the funeral procession was preparing to start at 2 o'clock. A force of police held them back, and scores of detectives searcher for suspicious persons.

Crowd Threatens Violence.

Patrolman O'Connor arrested Emil Lerch, suspected of annoying children at Second Avenue and Fourteenth Street yesterday morning, and was soon the centre of a threatening crowd thatm ade a call for reserves necesary. Lerch was taken into the rear yard of a tenement for safety till more policemen came and fought back the mob. He was released later.

In the course of the day detectives arrested several men whom they found idling or annoying children. On complaint of Father Curry of St. James's Church, Charles Holland, 40 years old, a rigger, of 12 Main Street, Port Richmond, S. I., was locked up in the Oak Street Station. Father Curry said the man han annoyed a little boy near his study. In Night Court he pressed the charge, and Holland was held pending an investigation.

Late last night Michael Futhlo, 35 years old, of 528 Market Street, Newark, was arrested in Brooklyn, charged with annoying children at Flatbush Avenue and East Twenty-sixth Street. The man wore dark brown clothes and a black felt hat and had a black mustache. When this description was furnished to Inspector Cray, he arranged to go to Brooklyn to see and question the prisoner. He decided to take with him one of the little girls who saw a man in the neighborhood of the Murray murder before and after the crime.

A Cold Douche.

He preached his finest sermon and thrilled the congregation in the little country church as it had never been thrilled before. At the close of the service he was feeling particularly well satisfied with himself, when the leading elder approached and asked him:

An Honorable Lassie.

Marjorie, aged 4, was in the library with her father while her mother was superintending the preparation of dinner. The attention of the head of the house was attracted by a scratching sound, and he looked up to find his daughter at work with a pair of scissors on the top of a polished table.

"Marjorie," he said, sternly, "go tell your mother what you've been doing!"

"I won't do it, papa," she said. "Do you think I'm a tattle tale?"—Judge.

BANK SUIT AN ISSUE AT NEXT SESSION

ASKS EXTENSION OF POWER

New Law Proposed Giving Controller Authority to Remove Bank Directors for Derelictions.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Developments of the last few days indicate that the controversy involved in the suit of the Riggs National Bank against the Secretary of the Treasury, Willim Gibbs McAdoo; the Controller of the Currency, John Skelton Williams, and the Treasurer of the United States, John Burke, will be thrashed out in Congress next Winter.

To bring the Government's contentions before the legislative authorities early in the struggle, Mr. Williams yesterday sent to members of the House Committee on Banking and Currency copies of documents setting forth his view of the alleged misdeeds of the bank. These documents are to form the basis for requests for legislation of a drastic sort to extend in a far-reaching way the powers of the Controller, which officials of the bank in their suit declare already to have been oppressively used.

The recommendations now contemplated by Mr. Williams, which he has embodied in a formal report to Congress since his controversy with the bank developed, include a law permitting him to fine banks and individual officers for violations of "instructions or admonitions" the Controller not now penalized; for authority to declare vacant the office of any Director of any national bank who fails to take the oath and forward it to the Controller's office within thirty days of election; to remove, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, any officer or Director of any national bank violating major provisions of the law; and to make Directors who fail to attend a majority of their board meetings ineligible for re-election without the special dispensation of the Controller.

Two papers were sent to the Committee members. One was the statement issued to the press by Mr. Williams on April 12, following the filing of the bank's suit, in which he embodied excerpts from his correspondence with the bank and summarized his reasons for the action complained of, bringing in turn serious charges against certain officers of the bank. The other was a copy of the letter written by Mr. Williams to the bank on April 5, which was published from sources other than the Treasury Department some time ago. This letter goes at length into the transaction with the Crocker National Bank of Chicago, embodying correspondence on the subject running back to February, 1908.

Will Complicate the Situation.

As the first stage in the pending court proceedings probably will have been concluded before Congress reconvenes, Mr. Williams's sending of this correspondence now to the House Committee is taken to mean that, if the Government is successful in its defense, he will ask Congress to broaden his powers even beyond the point at present complained of. On the other hand, if the bank wins its suit, it is inferred that the Controller will ask Congress for any powers which the court may hold it not to possess under existing law.

"In either case the demand for new legislation would be made while the expected appeals from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia were pending in the Supreme Court of the United States. If the legislation were granted, it would make the proceedings before the court of last resort practically a moot case, except as to the particular fines under consideration. This is expected to complicate the political aspects of the fight in Congress, where a sharp cleavage already evident on general subjects in the House committee would, in any event, make a lively struggle almost certain.

Mr. Williams already has indicated clearly to Congress his views of the powers he thinks ought to be lodged in the office of Controller of the Currency. Last December, in his annual report, he made extended recommendations in this direction, and while it cannot be said they were aimed at the Riggs National Bank it was pointed out today that many of his recommendations fitted precisely his complaints against officers of that bank. And his controversy with the bank was even then of long standing.

Since shortly after the filing of the bank's suit, Mr. Williams has steadily denied himself to interviewers, with the general statement that he had nothing to say for publication, and today he made no exception to this rule. But when a message was sent to him referring to his communication with the House Committee and asking his plans for new legislation bearing on the subject of the correspondence he sent back word that his recommendations for legislation could be found in his December report.

Controller's Fining Power.

One of the important phases of the present case in court is the fining power of the Controller. In his report he recommended a wide extension of this power, in the following language:

"It is earnestly recommended that the law be so amended as to place within the power of the Controller's office to penalize, by imposition of appropriate fines, all infractons and volatons of the law and regulatons of the office; and it is suggested that these fines should be imposed upon the offending officials, as well as upon the bank. Certain violations of the law and regulations should be punshable wth imprisonment, as well as a fine, suits to enforce such penalties, [illegible] Courts."

Since the Riggs National Bank brought suit against the Treasury officials Mr. Williams has sent out circulars to all national banks calling for detailed information regarding overdrafts and other points already at issue with the Riggs Bank. According to officials of this bank, though Mr. Williams denies it, the new circulars were intended to give a general complexion to demands made previously upon the Riggs Bank alone. In his December report Mr. Williams made this recommendation:

"Serious losses have been sustained by many national banks from overdrafts. The efforts of the department have been, with some success, directed toward the abatement of this evil, but an amendment to the law authorizing this office to impose appropriate fines for disregard of its instructions or admonitions in this regard would be very beneficia, and is respectfully recommended."

In his statement to the press of April 12, Mr. Williams made much of particular activities of officers. In his report to Congress he referred to the inadequacy of redress through the courts for losses sustained by stockholders through the "negligence or misfeasance of directors." He recommended a standardization of banking by-laws by which, as already indicated, officers and directors of national banks could be held to a strict accounting.

The crowded calendar of Congress last session and the postponement of general legislation resulting from the pressure for the enactment of the ill-fated Ship Purchase bill left no time for considering most of these recommendations. But it is believed that they will be discussed at length next Winter. Even if Mr. Williams does not renew his recommendations, they probably will be brought up in connection with an effort expected from certain Senators to legislation theh Controller of the Currency out of the Federal Reserve Board, and probably even to legislate the office out of existence.

GOV. WHITMAN HEARS FIGHT OVER JITNEYS

ENEMIES HINT AT JOKER

Lively Controversy Over Insurance Legislation—Hotchkiss Assails "Union" of Brokers in State.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 6.—Governor Whitman held a court of review today on several bills left by the Legislature for his consideration. The hearings began in the morning and lasted until late afternoon. Much interest centred in the hearing on the Thompson bill to compel the owners of Jitney buses to obtain the permission of municipalities and the Public Service Commission before operating.

Ex-Senator W. W. Armstrong, representing the Rochester Jitney Association of 600 members, opened the argument for the opposition. He said the bill was a bludgeon to remove competition. The jitney he described as the poor man's taxi, and said that if the fare were fixed at 10 cents there would be no opposition. The buses, he went on, should be regulated by the various cities.

He charged that a Mr. Newton of a Buffalo traction company had drawn the bill. This, Senator Thompson denied, saying that Ledyard P. Hale, counsel for the Public Service Commission had prepared the original draft of the bill.

Mr. Armstrong saidthat only vested interests would profit by the bil, and he appealed in behalf of the poor man. He also reminded the Governor of the big vote which Rochester cast for him. Ex-Assemblyman John J. McInerney and Bainbridge W. Colby, also argued in opposition.

David Robinson, Secretary of the Broadway Association of New York City, favored the bill, because it would tend to regulate traffic and protect life.

"Broadway is the greatest thoroughfare in the world," he said, "and to obtain the best conditions and enable [illegible] tions.

"As an example of the great traffic on Broadway, let me cite the count taken at Broadway and Fifty-ninth Street and around Columbus Circle at a very light hour—3 to 4 o'clock in the afternoon. There were 642 surface cars, 1,930 vehicles going north, and 1,329 vehicles going south."

Frederick H. Elliott, Secretary of the Safety First Society of New York City, favored the bill in the interest of safety to the traveling public and pedestrians.

"In justice to the people," he said, "the State should place certain restrictions on the operation of irresponsible Jitneys."

William Nottingham, of Syracuse, favoring the bill said that the transportation companies now in the field were called upon to bea heavy burdens in serving the public. Mayor Schoolcraft, of Schenectady favored the bill as a step in the direction of home rule for cities.

There was a quibble over the clause "the consent of the authorities as defined by the railroad law," which those opposing the measure called a joker. They held that under this clause a jitney owner would have to obtain the consent of property owners along his route.

Governor Whitman said he was afraid that such was the correct interpretation of the clause. Senator Thompson said that if that was the effect of the bill he did not want the Governor to sign it.

J. A. Admaill, representing Harris, Forbes & Co., brokers, said he spoke in the interest of traction investments. Since the introduction of the jitneys, he asserted, the busines sof traction securities had fallen off greatly.

There was a lively hearing over the Simpson bill, which provides that no Trustee, Director, or officer of a life insurance company shall require a borrower of such company upon mortgage to negotiate any insurance policy on the mortgaged property through a particular broker, or attempt to divert to any particular broker the patronage of borrowers from the insurance company, or refuse to accept a policy because it was not negotiated through a particular broker.

The measure was opposed by William J. Tulley, attorney for the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, who said it was directed against his company by a small cotorie of brokers, and would drive money out of the State. He said hat his company held mortgages on $215,000,000 of property in the United States and Canada, of which $180,000,000 was in New York City alone.

HUNGARY CLAIMS LEAD IN THE WAR

Austria, When Threatened, Forced to Adopt Her Anti-Slav Ideals.

LONG THE EAST BARRIER

Jules R. Arbocz Even Declares That the Hungarian Premier "Conceived and Dictated the Ultimatum to Servia."

Amerikai Tudósito, or the American Hungarian Correspondent, in presenting the cause of Hungary to American readers, declares that due attention has not been given to the union of the Dual Monarchy and Germany or to the historical facts which made Hungary the senior partner of Austria in playing "a great part in the immediate beginning of the war" and which now force her "to continue to be an equally important factor in its progress and termination."

In any eventuality, Hungary is a force which cannot be ignored: "She has produced in the past and is producing today men of genius in statesmanship (Baron de Burian, a Magyar, has just succeeded Count Berchtold as the Common Minister of Foreign Affairs of Austria-Hungary,) in philosophy, in art, and in literature; she holds a high place in the European family of nations; her geographical position makes her a factor to be reckoned with in European politics."

"We do not," says the writer, Jules R. Arbocz, "wish to minimize the other causes, such as the fierce rivalry of England and Germany for the commercial supremacy of the world, or the ultimate inevitability of the conflict between Teuton and Slav; we merely wish to prove that in the forefront of the causes which brought about this world cataclysm stands the nation of Hungary."

M. Arbocz also proclaims the fact that Count Tisza, the Hungarian Premier, whose influence is supposed to have placed Baron de Burian in power, both thought out and framed the famous ultimatum launched by Austria-Hungary against Servia on July 23, 1914.

Our argument, he says, stats in the last epoch of Europe's history, the climax of which was the exclusion by Bismarck of the Imperial Roman Haubsburgs from Teuton territory. Directly this was the cause of the present German Empire, and indirectly of the present Austrian Empire. At the same time Bismarck in his famous speech to the Haubsburgs advised them to build their sway on the base of Hungarian rather than Austrian traditions. The clear understanding of this historical fact will be sufficient in itself to reveal to us the most far-reaching among the preliminary causes of the war, because the ancient traditions of Austria were necessarily always directed toward the west, while those of Hungary were forever tending toward the east.

By western tendency we mean a traditional striving for the supremacy over the Teuton hegemony, a tendency which is anti-Hohenzollern and anti-Prussian; while eastern tendency implies supremacy over the Oriental Slav hegemony, and therefore is anti-Russian. Consequently if at the beginning of the war the Haubsburgs Empire would have stood by its old principles and not by the new, i. e. Hungarian ones, war the Haubsburgs' Empire would not now be fighting for the Germans but against them and on the side of the Russians, or at least they would be fighting for the overthrow of the Prussian hegemony and the Hohenzollern dynasty.

We can understand correctly this anti-Slav tendency of Hungarian tradition only when we examine carefully Hungary's natural position. The Hungarians, originating from the Finn-Ugot race-root, have absolutely no connection whatsoever with any of the peoples who now surround them geographically. Read her history; you will be forced to admit that it was she who in the great struggles of the past was the bulwark which was incessantly besieged. It was she who defended all Europe; she was the barrier against which dashed and were broken the westward-driving floods of Oriental barbarians.

It is quite clear that her motive in all this was not entirely altruistic, but was coupled with self-interest. A glance at the map of Europe will show why. The Carpathian Mountains, lifting their rampart-like forms in a huge semi-circle along the entire western frontier, are the great natural boundaries of Hungary. But the value of the Carpathians is not only strategic; it is also economic, as they save Hungary an untold military outlay for western fortifications. And when western civilization trumped it was the Hungarian nation that again held that shield and mediated with western and southern Europe and their eastern enemies.

At first the Servians, under the ill-fated Obranovitch dynasty, refused to aid or ally themselves with the Muscovites, preferring to side with Hungarian imperialism, which, like a tutelary spirit, insured them a normal progress toward national independence and the acquisition of Western culture. But when the political corruption triumphed in the assassination of the King, it overcame the better elements in Servian politics, violently assailed the unobtrusive but real religious spirit of the people, and, armed with violent and vile principles and absurdest slogans, quickly brought the foreign policy of Servia in a most precarious position. Having [illegible] their compact to the caller of the great Russian and anti-Slav aspirations, a policy blind, heinous, and degrading, they went further in their treachery and betrayed their ancient and true benefactor.

History also proves that it was the same Hungarian imperialism which protected Servia from the Turks. For was it not the immortal Christian hero Hunyadi, who victoriously drove back the Turks and so saved Servia? This policy of Hungarian imperialism is best stated by Louis Kossuth, who in his memoirs of the war of 1848-49 declares that that war was not fought by Hungary merely for her own liberty, but that if successful it was his intention to make a union of all the Balkan States by creating a United States of Europe.

And when on the eve of this great world-upheaval the rudder of the State was placed in the hands of Count Stephan Tisza, a statesman of unusual ability, his eye immediately pierced the surrounding mist. He saw that the going-around-the-wall of the Carpathians meant the destruction of Hungary's old, war-scarred fortifications, and he also saw that neither Hungary, Austria, nor Germany realized the dreadful proximity of the danger. It was he, the able helmsman, who fully comprehended that Hungary, on the very eve of this great accounting, was entirely unprepared, and that Destiny once more demanded of her that she live up to the glory of her great past, and make ready.

Concentrating all the powers of his great mind and iron will on the reorganization of the Hungarian State, he first put an end to the foolish internal political strife, and with the far-sightedness of a genius brought back the foreign policy of Bismarck. And when all the preparations were completed and the crisis was at hand it was Count Tisza who, before the body of the heir-apparent was cold, conceived and dictated the ultimatum to Servia, an ultimatum aimed exclusively at the Muscovite-Slav aspirations, which were not only banging against the Carpathians from without, but bombarding the country within.

Yet the immediate breaking out of the war was not due to Count Tisza but to those great historical factors in whose progress he, like every great figure in history, was merely the instrument. Count Tisza did no more than recognize the truth and play a part that was unavoidable. He did not delay until the enemy could unite all its strength against his country; he did not wait to see Russian armies marching up and down the Carpathian passes; but realizing the opportunity and anticipating the issues he struck the first blow!

Tolstoy once wrote that the real elements of power are not the individual peoples, but the antagonistic wanderlust of nations which were the direct cause of the movements of the human race ever since the beginning of the world. In this case it was the historical calling of the Hungarian people which was the innermost actuating cause of this great world-movement, a fact which cannot be ignored even though the American press does not care to occupy itself with a matter so trivial.

The time will come when we will be forced to admit that we, two thousand years after Christ, could not determine the real causes of a great world-war merely because we failed to see a geographical fact marked very distinctly on the map of Europe.

Mistake to Buy a Van.

A noticeable feature of modern caravanning is the large number of ladies who take to the road for rest and health seeking. Quite a third, if not more, of the members of the Caravan Club are of that sex, and are among its most active members. The usual places for camping, or pitching to be correct, are on the fields or farms and not on commons or roadside waste. Pitching on the latter may lead to unpleasantness, for during the night a band of gypsies may turn up and become close neighbors, and they are never desirable comrades on the road at close quarters. Farmers, as a rule, gladly welcome the gentleman gypsy, for it means cash sales of milk and dairy produce, and the Caravan Club has quite a thousand of such pitches registered throughout the country.

It is a great mistake to buy a van and rush off on the road. You never know what sort of the many types of van will suit you till you try, so it is always advisable to hire first and by experience determine whether you are suited to the life and whether the particular type of van you are traveling in suits you. A party of two, three, or four can travel cheaper in a caravan than one, for the expenses of vehicle and horse remain the same, whether one or more be of the party. And there is just one bit of advice the tyro in vanning may bear in mind. As health and strength depend very largely upon good cooking, in each amateur gypsy party should be included a good, all round, plain cook.—J. H. S., in London Morning Post.

HOW MARITZ TOLD THE BOERS TO REBEL

BOTHA A MURDEROUS "DOG"

Ended Remarks with Tears, After Which He Arrested Those Who Refused to Follow Him.

MANCHESTER, April 20.—A remarkable document, from which extracts are given in this letter, has reached The Manchester Guardian from South Africa. It is the text of the speech that was delivered by the rebel leader, Lieut. Colonel Maritz, to his commando when, last October, he openly declared his revolt and asked those who were present to throw in their lot with him.

In the text is also included the short speech which Maritz made to the men who refused to follow him, and whom he thereupon declared to be his prisoners.

The correspondent who sends the documents is a well-known resident of Cape Town, and guarantees their authenticity.

Colonel Maritz's Speech.

Maritz said in part:

"Burghers and countrymen, here I stand, and I stand alone before God and you. Alone? Yes, alone, and I want no one to go with me. I ask none of you to side with me; but here I stand for the welfare of my country, and what I have taken upon myself I am going to fight for; and if any of you think my cause is not the right one, or that I am turning traitor to my country and to you, send a bullet through my head, for then I am not worthy to live, and may God Almighty send a flash of lightning and wipe me out, here where I stand, if my cause is not a right one.

"My cause is this: Ever since the late war I have intended to free my country of the English and capitalists who rule us for their own benefits and pump from us and the poor of South Africa the little we have to satisfy their own avarice and line their own pockets with the little they take from us poor by means of tax, which must be pay.

"I don't see why we can't have our own Government and independant rule. Why must we, an independant nation, be ruled by another nation, and be trampled upon as if we were rubbish?

"See how men like General Hertzog and others have been treated—men who have done their utmost for our goodwill. See by what low means they (Generl Botha and party) have put General Hertzog out of the Ministery, the only man who acted and aimed toward the welfare of his nation. Yes, my burghers, see what has been done to the man who had the welfare of African nationality at heart.

"Botha, low, scandalous hound that he is, shall be brought to bay, and may God grant that I may meet him in a hand-to-hand fight, that I may just cool my burning heart.

"Yes, I call Botha a dog not worthy to be looked upon. Not only has he deceived his country, but even you, upon whom he is dependent for his vile work, which he wants you to commit. He called you up, not for war, but for a special peace training camp; and now that he has got you away from your parents he has given me orders to take you up to the border, there to die of hunger and thirst or be killed by the Germans. How can a man with common sense expect me to take you there, as unprovided as you all see we are here? The Germans are provided with numerous cannon and other big guns, and ammunition far superior to ours. How on earth can we think of fighting against such a power, we not even having one cannon for a defense? When I told him all this he had the flimsy excuse that we were not ordered over the border.

Botha a "Vile Dog."

"Yes, Botha is a vile dog; no less than a murderer. He wants to satisfy and please honor-seeking England, and I tell you I will no longer be ruled by such a shameless, honor-hunting, and at the same time vile Government as the Botha Government, and may God help me!

"It is more than a year since I corresponded with the German Governor, and now we have come to a conclusion and signed a contract by which I shall free my country. There are 6,000 German soldiers at my disposal, but I don't need them, because I depend on the South Africans to fight for their own independence. If America can have independence, why can't we have it too? And if the South Africans won't have it, then I'll say farewell to South Africa, and take up my abode in some other country where I need not submit to the vile English Government. The English King speaks of God being on his side, but I say he has no right to use the name of God, for where will you ever find a more uncivilized nation than the English? They still speak of civilization. You all know how matters stood in the last war. Just think of the 26,000 women and children. Can we ever forget that? You may, but I never shall.

"The German Kaiser has a most lawful right to use the name of God, for he is fighting to preserve right and peace, and on that account the German nation is the most civilized nation, and holds the greatest discipline of the world.

"Up to the present God has been guiding me, because ever since the idea dawned and I asked God to guide me and to put me right if I am wrong. I am not a man who goes about with my religion printed on my forehead. Still, I live in daily, yes, hourly communication with Him who grants me the right and time to speak this to you.

"When I last saw General Beyers I told him and General De Wet my plans, and they quite sided with me; so did [illegible], and the late General De la Rey. To the latter, in fact to all of them, I most humbly disclosed all my plans, because they are men whose only aim is for the welfare of the African nation. They knew everything long before the war, for when I was appointed to go to Pretoria to the Depot I told my plans, of which he fully approved. I can assure you I did not put on this uniform to serve England with, but I did it for the good will of my country, and now I am on the point to act.

"As you all know, I have a wife and two children, and I love them. Heaven knows I do, but my country comes before them."

Address to Prisoners.

With this, says the report, Maritz's tears overwhelmed him, and he ended his speech. He then called on all the men before him to step forward if they were prepared to stand by him. Those who refused he made prisoners, and to them he said:

"My dear men, I am sorry that I must take you in such a cool way; yes, I myself call it a base thing to do. I am sorry you can't be with your people there to offer your services, but as it is I don't want to shed unnecessary blood, for what could you few do against the lot here?"

Thereupon one of the prisoners answered.

"It was a mean trick you played us, seeing that we had the best of the situation. We could have defended ourselves with our Maxims."

This irritated Maritz very much, and he said: "Man, do you think I am afraid of a Maxim? I do not fear hell, much less a Maxim. I will give you a chance, though. I challenge any one of you to a revolver duel; then you can have your revenge on me. I am not going to have any of my men unnecessarily shot, but you can have it out with me."

A telegram from Pretoria on Feb. 10 said it was reported that the Germans had executed Lieut. Colonel Maritz.

JEWISH SCHOOLS CONTINUE.

Those in Turkey Unhampered by Government Despite the War.

That the Turkish authorities are placing no obstacles in the way of the activities of charitable and philanthropic institutions, even when these are controlled from enemy countries, seems to be indicated by a special report received yesterday by the American representative of the Alliance Israelite Universelle, an international Jewish organisation, with headquarters in Paris. The Alliance maintains 190 schools, most of them in Turkey in Europe and Asia Minor, Syria, Mesopotamia, and other regions under Mohammedan influence.

The report, dated April 23 and sent by Jacques Bigart, Secretary of the Alliance, said in part:

"All our institutions in Turkey keep up their work. Primary, professional, and agricultural schools are open and active, and the conditions under which they are placed are practically satisfactory, even those of Syria. The Turkish Government has placed no obstacle against their progress. The expulsion from Palestine of non-Turkish Jews has not sensibly affected the situation of our schools there. The number of our pupils and teachers has even been considerably increased in localities by reason of the closing of Christian schools, which numbered quite a number of Jewish pupils.

"The unavoidable diminution of our resources has unfortunately constrained us to suppress soon after the beginning of the war certain activities of secondary activities, which, in the impoverished state of the Jewish communities, are scarcely able to be kept up without our financial co-operation."

Best & Co.

Fifth Avenue at Thirty-fifth Street.

THE Best white sales now going on are not limited to underwear, but include dresses, blouses, and, so far as possible, a selection of articles from each department.

Primarily the reason for this is to acquaint just as many women as possible with the values found in every department at Best's.

The response to these white sales seems to prove that the policy is successful. The careful buying New York woman is evidently proving to herself that at Best's she finds exactly the merchandise she wants, that values are as stated.

The style, the materials, the prices are so right that Best's becomes her own particular shopping place.

How Much Do You Pay for a Suit of Clothes?

You have seen clothes at $35 to $45 that you wouldn't wear on a bet.

You can not safely judge clothes by how the price suits your eye. $35 or $45 in an advertisement beside a clever illustration may deceive the very elect.

And, by the same token, $19.75 might give one the equally erroneous impression that the suit didn't measure up to a high grade man's taste.

As a matter of fact, we show Suits for men and young men at $19.75 that you couldn't tell from suits priced $5 more at other shops, no matter how expert your judgment.

Men in the clothes business, seeing these Suits at $19.75, ask us: "How do you do it?"

And we answer with a hyphenated word, "Ready-cash." We buy for cash and we sell for cash. Your own business judgment knows what that means.

We ask you to compare suits at $22.50 and more elsewhere with these

Suits at $19.75

We omit descriptions—most descriptions sound alike, whatever the price. But we do emphasize that rich woolens, new and exclusive patterns and the smart, snappy styles good dressers like—are here in profusion.

Young Men's Smart Suits, $14.75

English soft roll sack Suits at this price are excellent value in style, fit, material and workmanship. We've seen Suits at $18.75 not nearly so attractive.

Youths' Suits (14 to 19) $12.75

Just so stylish as the very young man could want. English effects, large patch pockets, large rolling lapel. Sack and Norfolk models. Just right as a boy's first "long trouser" Suit.

RAILROAD ACCUSED OF RULING A CITY

ATTACK ON CONSTABULARY

H. Maurer, Socialist Member of State Legislature, Says Force Obeys Will of Corporations.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—The most sensational testimony given at the Industrial Commissions hearing today, was that of ex-Mayor Samuel M. Hoyer, of Altoona, who told of the relations of the Pennsylvania Railroad to the strike in that city in 1911 and the control that corporation is reported to wield in the affairs of Altoona as "a corporation-controlled" city. Mr. Hoyer said that George W. Creighton, General Superintendent of the Pennsylvania Railroad, had suggested to him the arrest of strikers who were parading the streets. Mr. Hoyer said that such a move would lead to riot and bloodshed and was against the law. He testified that Mr. Creighton said "Well, what of that."

This same witness said that a special policeman had viciously assaulted a labor organizer and was arrested by the State authorities. He was placed under bail and never appeared for trial. After the strike was over, Mr. Hoyer asserted, Mr. Redding, Superintendent of motive power of the Pennsylvania Railroad, came to him and said: "We have fixed the Judge and District Attorney and you are the only stumbling block to the return of the special policeman to his family here."

An attack was also made upon the Pennsylvania constabulary by James H. Maurer, Socialist member of the Pennsylvania State Legislature and President of the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor, in which he denounced the members of the State Police as "a cross between the Russian Cossacks and the Irish Constabulary," and "ex-United States soldiers and degenerate sons of the middle class and no-accounts."

This attack came toward the end or the day and after John C. Lamb, Assistant Superintendent of the police, and Deputy Attorney General Cunningham of Pennsylvania had been assured by Chairman Walsh that the subject would not be gone into today. These men, who were prepared to deny every assertion of the labor leader, were not present today, but will be heard tomorrow along with Captain John C. Groome, commanding the constabulary.

Constabulary Owned by Corporations.

While Mr. Maurer's attack was for the most part general, he cited several instances, such as the Bethlehem Steel Works and the Hazelton street car strikes where the police, he charged, worked for the corporations and shot down innocent men and women. The tenor of his testimony was that the State Police merely represented the corporations, and did very little duty outside of acting at strikes. Finally, under cross-examination, he said that he was opposed to State Police and the National Guard. He refused to disavow the dynamiting done by the McNamaras.

The testimony of Maurer was picturesque and highly interesting to many of those present, who included "Mother" Jones and many labor leaders of Pennsylvania, who have been repeating what Mr. Maurer told about, before the Pennsylvania Legislature for many years.

Simon C. Long, General Manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad, related how the railroad had fought its strikes, especially the strike on the Monongahela branch. His testimony for the most part was without incident, except when he attempted to give his views on workingmen's compensation. He said that W. H. Pierce of the Brotherhood of Federated Railroad Employes, after failing in his effort to organize the men on that road, had applied for a position with the railroad to look after its interest in the Legislature.

Touching upon the mediation and conciliation plan, Mr. Long said that he hoped the system could be improved. When asked what suggestions he had to improve it, he replied: "If I knew how to work out a system that would prevent the troubles between employer and employe I would patent it. Things are getting better, however, and labor and capital are nearer together."

Mr. Long said that the trouble with many compensation laws was that they tended to pauperize the beneficiaries, and added that in many States such laws were not successful. "What we want to do is to keep the people of this country out of the poorhouse," he said. "Why, in some sections of Pennsylvania, especially in the country, it is more disgraceful to go to the poorhouse than the jail."

E. B. Hunt, in charge of the relief work of the Pennsylvania Railroad, testified on that subject and the pension system.

Pennsylvania Railroad in Politics.

Mr. Hoyer, who was Mayor of Altoona in 1911, during the strike in the shops there, related in great detail the plans of the Pennsylvania Railroad officials to stop the strike and to control politics in that town. He said that there was no disorder in the city, and that the labor organizers conducted themselves properly. He declared that a member of the American Federation of Labor had been ordered to leave one of the hotels because the proprietor was afraid that he would lose his license.

He then told of how a Pennsylvania Railroad policeman named Luther had viciously assaulted a labor organizer named Gallagher. The latter's life hung in the ballance for many weeks. Luther was arrested by the State authorities, but escaped after obtaining bail. He also said that G. W. Creighton, General Superintendent of the system, had hired all the halls in Altoona and the three towns near by to prevent the strikers assembling.

"Mr. Creighton suggested to me," testified Mr. Hoyer, "that I should order the arrest of the strikers. I told him that I had no authority under law and would not interfere with them as long as they were peaceful and orderly. We had quite a discussion about this, and I finally said to him that I would do my duty as Mayor even though I had to leave town next day."

"What charge did Mr. Creighton prefer against the strikers?" asked a Commissioner.

"None. He wanted them arrested, as he said, on general principles. Mr. Creighton kept insisting that I order the arrest of the strikers, especially some of the organizers. I said to him and bloodshed.' He said to me: 'Suppose there is.' That made me mad and I refused to listen to him further on this subject and ordered my police to see that order was preserved. Mr. Creighton is present, and if I am wrong he can correct me. He stated this opinion in the presence of the Chief of Police and others. He did not want apparently to settle the strike, only to get rid of the organizers."

Mr. Hoyer then told of a meeting at which, he said, he pleaded with Mr. Creighton to take back the men. This he declined to do, saying that the time for their return expired that morning. "I said to him: 'If you don't take the men back I will lead the strike myself.'" added the witness. This, and petitions presented by Altoona citizens, prevailed upon the road to change its order and the men were finally taken back to work.

People Treated Fairly.

After the strike, Mr. Hoyer said, Mr. Redding, Chief of Motive Power, asked him to "let up" on Luther, the officer who had assaulted the labor organizer. "Mr. Redding said to me, 'We have fixed the Judge and District Attorney, and you are the only stumbling block to Luther's return.' I said to them that I had no objection to his returning, as the city police had not arrested him, and it was a Commonwealth matter. The next day Luther returned."

Mr. Hoyer said that the Pennsylvania treated the people fairly in Altoona, and did not attempt to exert any more influence on politics than other corporations.

"Can any candidate be elected to office if opposed by the Pennsylvania Railroad?" he was asked.

"Yes. The road does not take an active or offensive part in politics. Every time the foremen try to influence the workmen to vote for a particular man that fellow is usually defeated."

In one instance, said Mr. Hoyer, the Pennsylvania forced the passage of a bill over his veto which awarded a contract for about $300,000 to the highest bidder.

"What do you mean when you said you would do your duty whether you had to leave town or not?" he was asked.

"I meant that the road was powerful and you know what that means."

"What do you think of the assertion that the company had fixed the Judge?"

"I think it is a disgrace."

"Did Mr. Redding say who had fixed the Judge?"

"He said 'we.'"

Mr. Creighton here took the stand, and was about to explain his activity in the strike when he was asked to give way to Mr. Maurer. Mr. Creighton will resume his testimony tomorrow. Before he left the stand he did not get to that part of the testimony of Mr. Hoyer in which he was charged with suggesting arrests, even if bloodshed followed.

Against All State Police.

Mr. Maurer said he had been on the spot at all the labor disturbances in recent years and had observed the work of the constabulary closely. He charged them with being rough to the strikers, beating them, riding down old people, going into the houses of laboring people without any authority, and, in some cases, committing robbery, and in specified cases killing men without just cause.

When the constabulary is called into service in a strike area, Mr. Maurer said, the region was ipso facto under martial law, and the members of the force had the right, under the law, to enter houses without warrants to search for arms or for any other necessary purpose. They had the power to apprehend men and women without warrants or any process of law. Often, he said, the constabulary would perform their duties in citizens' clothes and try to incite the strikers to violence in order to beat them up and get them into jail.

He told of an appeal to ex-Governor Tener in connection with the strike at Hazleton and McAdoo, and the investigation that followed in which it was shown that members of the constabulary took the part of strike-breakers, and in one instance paid a fine for one arrested for violence. His efforts as a legislator to abolish the constabulary was told by Mr. Maurer.

Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, a member of the commission, asked Mr. Maurer what he would substitute in place of the constabulary, if it were to be abolished, and the witness answered by saying he would not have a soldier in the world if he could prevent it. "It is a crime the way we are killing each other," he declared.

Commissioner Weinstock wanted to know how he would deal with such labor methods as those pursued by the McNamaras. Mr. Maurer here showed some confusion. He did not disavow the crimes of the McNamaras, but he hardly wanted to make an answer that would defend them.

Commissioner Garretson asked which he thought worth more, "a house or the future of a human life and the future of all the innocent ones dependent on that life." Mr. Maurer said that under the moral law the future of a human life was surely worth more than a house or property of any kind.

Mr. Weinstock interposed the suggestion that if the house contained human beings and was dynamited the witness might think differently. "Oh, that is another kind of a house," replied Mr. Maurer.

The desire in New York, Illinois, and Virginia for a State constabulary, Mr. Mauer said, was not based on any history of industrial troubles that would justify such an organization. Those States had been quiet and law-abiding, and it was more the wish of private corporations than the people generally to have a State constabulary.

POLITICAL KILLINGS BEFORE GRAND JURY

OPPOSES SHOWING MINUTES

Prosecutor Compares Downtown Crime Situation to That Which Resulted in Rosenthal Murder.

Political murders in the Second Assembly District as a development of the Foley-Rofrano feud will result in many more indictments, Assistant District Attorney Delehanty announced in the Criminal Term of the Supreme Court yesterday before Justice Davis. The crime situation in the Assembly District, Mr. Delehanty said, is comparable with the condition in this city which resulted in the killing of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler.

Gaetano Montimagno is to be tried next Monday for the murder of Michael Giamari, a Tammany election district captain, on March 8. Two other men, Rocco Carnivale and Frank Fennimore, who, it is charged, instigated the murder, were indicted as principals also. Yesterday their counsel, Lloyd P. Stryker, applied for an order to inspect the minutes of the Grand Jury. This brought out the fact that the District Attorney's office and the Grand Jury have been delving deep into the political murders and assaults in the Foley-Rofrano district. Mr. Delehanty, addressing the court, said:

"These indictments grow out of a situation in this city which more nearly concerns—and I say this upon my responsibility as a public official—more nearly concerns the enforcement of law in this city than even the conditions which culminated in the murder of Herman Rosenthal in July, 1912, by a lieutenant of police.

"There are persons involved in the murder of Giamari and there is proof before the Grand Jury respecting the culpability of other persons whose guilt, in my opinion, can be demonstrated and shortly will be before a petit jury. There are proofs which will lead to persons not yet indicted and not yet in the tolls of the law. I say that the interests of public justice will be in a most unusual measure prejudiced if the Grand Jury minutes are made public."

"How do you answer that, Mr. Stryker," Justice Davis asked.

"That appeals to the court very strongly because in the contest with organized crime in this county the people of the county are at a great disadvantage if informed of what occurs before the Grand Jury. I will reserve decision on the motion."

Montimagno is charged with shooting down Giamari at Chestnut and Madison Streets. Carnivale and Fennimore, it is charged, inspired the murder at conferences held in Brooklyn. The political feud in the Second District is between the adherents of ex-Sheriff Thomas F. Foley and the members of the Home Rule Club, who seceded from Foley's leadership.

Daniels Visits Annapolis.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Secretary Daniels, accompanied by Mrs. Daniels and Commander Wuertzbaugh, his naval aide, visited the Naval Academy at Annapolis today as the guests of Rear Admiral Fullam, the superintendent of the Academy, and will remain at Annapolis until tomorrow. The primary object of the secretary's visit was to attend the regular Thursday night dinner of the graduating class which is in the nature of a course in after-dinner speaking and was inaugurated by the midshipmen to to acquire a certain facility and readiness of speaking in public prior to graduation.

He Visits Her in Baltimore—Engagement to Mrs. Astor Denied.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, May 6.—Clarence H. Mackay, who arrived here yesterday with a party of New York friends, including Mrs. John Jacob Astor, spent most of today with his daughter, who is ill at Johns Hopkins Hospital.

"My daughter is not seriously ill," he said tonight. "She has a severe cold and then grip, and it entirely depends upon her condition how long I shall remain in Baltimore. I was summoned here when she became ill, and had her removed to Johns Hopkins Hospital. I am glad to say she is doing well."

The fact that Mr. Mackay and Mrs. Astor have been together a great deal recently has caused rumors of an engagement. A member of Mr. Mackay's party said tonight, that there was no truth in the rumor.

EFFECT OF ASQUITH SLANG.

"Deliver the Goods" May Prompt Balfour to Say "Get a Move On."

LONDON, April 28.—Premier Asquith has used the phrase, "Deliver the goods." The Premier is noted for his precise and classical English, and when he puts his seal on an Americanism it is in a fair way to become incorporated in English usage.

"Lloyd George," says one newspaper, "who is more forceful but not so classical, has talked about 'Push and go.' Now it remains for Mr. Balfour, if he can spare a moment from his new duties at the Admiralty, to tell us to 'Get a move on.' But our statesmen have yet some distance to go before they attain the homeliness of phrase of America's public men."

A Menace to the South.

The menace of suffrage to the Southern woman is so much greater than any corresponding benefit depicted by the suffragists that it is a marvel that any Southern woman can tolerate the thought.

The Bristow amendment gave to the knowledge and control of the National Government the voting lists and precincts of each State. The Mondell amendment, advocated by Mrs. Shaw, Mrs. McCormick, (the daughter of Mark Hanna,) and other negrophiles, would confer suffrage without regard to sex or color or locality. The Shafroth amendment would require the request from only 8 per cent. of the voters of the State to place their Mondell amendment before the people, and thus any State lining up would put its head in the noose of national control. There would be no possible way of controlling the negro vote as it is now controlled. We would be at the mercy of the party in power or the party that would soon get in power by purchase of negro votes.

The honest seeker after truth says at this juncture: "But our people would not stand for negro vote!" Ah, me! What does this mean? Do we want the power of might tested out again? Such would be the only way.

Miss Gordon said in Atlanta: "Of course, we prefer suffrage by States, but we will have it by national law, if we can't get it otherwise." This is the strong arm of militancy run riot.

Refusal on her part to sympathize with the President's grief because he had refused to advocate suffrage is feminism to a most savage degree of hardness.

No other argument need be advanced against suffrage in the South other than the necessity of maintaining State sovereignty. Any national law that shall further control State franchise would violate a State's autonomy.—A Southern Woman in The Chattanooga Times.

WIRELESS DEFENCE SET UP IN COURT

EXPERT EXPLAINS DETAILS

Counsel for the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company rested its case against the Atlantic Communication Company yesterday in the United States District Court in Brooklyn. The Marconi Company is suing for an injunction to prevent the German Company from using the Telefunken apparatus in this country, asserting that the German mechanism was an infringement on the Marconi and Lodge patents.

Contrary to expectations, Guglielmo Marconi, inventor of the wireless system, did not testify yesterday. The entire session of the court was taken up with the direct and cross-examination of Frank Waterman, an electrical expert, who testified for the Marconi corporation on the technical details of the Lodge and Marconi apparatus and the Telefunken patents. Mr. Marconi will probably be called in rebuttal at the close of the defendant's case.

Two complete sets of wireless apparatus have been set up in the courtroom by the defendant company to demonstrate the fundamental differences between its appliances and those of the Marconi system.

Professor Ferdinand Braun of the University of Strassburg, Germany, inventor of the wireless system, did not testify yesterday. Professor Braun said yesterday that he was certain the courts would rule that his inventions were entirely different from those of Marconi.

"I met Mr. Marconi in 1908 at Stockholm," said the German inventor, "when the Nobel conference divided the electrical award between Marconi and myself. I am sure that the Sayville Station will be kept open, and that the courts will decide in our favor."

Mr. Marconi stated that his company's case was as strong as the case against the National Electric Signalling Company. Aside from that he refused to comment.

Former Congressman Herman A. Metz was an interested spectator during yesterday's session.

The case will be continued before Judge Van Vechten Veeder today.

SNOW AND FROST IN WEST.

Heavy Windstorm Hits Oklahoma—Fear Felt for Crops.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 6.—Snow fell in Northwest Kansas, a section of the Panhandle of Texas and at Denver, Col., during the last twenty-four hours. Killing frosts prevailed last night over Nebraska, the Dakotas, Montana and Wyoming, while Oklahoma, Texas, Iowa, Missouri, and a large portion of Kansas experienced cold rains.

Goodland, Kan., got an inch of snow, while flurries fell in the northwestern part of the State. Dalhart, Texas, reported a white blanket covered that section of the Panhandle this morning. Fears are felt for fruit trees there.

ARDMORE, Okla., May 6.—Three persons were injured and much property damaged here today by a heavy windstorm. It was reported that Wilson, Okla., near here, was hit by a storm which blew down forty buildings, but that no one was seriously injured. Winds of almost tornado proportions were reported over a wide section of Southern Oklahoma.

At Ringling a church was blown down. In the Petrolia oil fields near Wichita Falls, Texas, twenty-five derricks were wrecked and several houses damaged. The ward school here was partly unroofed and several children injured.

ENTIRE FLEET DUE EARLY TOMORROW

WILSON LUNCHEON MAY 17

Navy League Arranges Ball for Visiting Officers—Ships to be Illuminated Saturday Night.

The Atlantic Fleet is now on its way to New York, and the superdreadnoughts, dreadnoughts, and pre-dreadnoughts of Admiral Fletcher's great command will probably be at anchor in the Hudson by 9 o'clock tomorrow morning. At 11 o'clock Acting Mayor McAneny will go aboard the fleet flagship Wyoming, which will anchor opposite Eighty-second Street, and officially welcome Admiral Fletcher and his men. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon Admiral Fletcher and his staff will return the Acting Mayor's visit. These courtesies will be followed by an illumination of all the fighting ships Saturday night, the illuminated column stretching from Eighty-second to 140th Street. The Wyoming will be at the southern end and the Louisiana at the northern end.

Finley J. Shepard, chairman of the committee for the entertainment of the enlisted men, said yesterday, in announcing additions to his program, that so many suggestions were being received, all tending to give the enlisted men a notable week in New York, that it would be necessary to refuse many.

"In the first place," said Mr. Shepard, "it is necessary to say that one of the objects of having the fleet here for a week is to give the enlisted men, who have been busy all Winter, a period of rest. At the request of the officers of the fleet this committee has, therefore, restricted the number of entertainments in order to allow the men as much free time as possible. If we were to follow our own inclination and accept all the invitations that come in, the enlisted men would be kept going from early morning until late at night for the full ten days, and would probably go out to sea on May 18 in need of a real rest."

The big night for the enlisted men, Mr. Shepard said, would be next Thursday night, and that for this part of the entertainment Madison Square Garden had been obtained. The program will include four boxing contests, in one of which Jim Coffey, the Irish heavyweight, will appear; four vaudeville acts, and many athletic events, in the latter of which the bluejackets will take part. The entertainment will be exclusively for the enlisted men, and it is expected that about 15,000 will attend.

George T. Wilson, Chairman of the Dinner Committee of the Mayor's Committee, announced yesterday that, in addition to the dinner to be given in honor of the officers on Saturday, May 15, at the Waldorf-Astoria, there would be a luncheon in honor of the President at the Biltmore on Monday, May 17, immediately after the land parade. It is expected that there will be about 500 present, and the only speech will be that of President Wilson. George McAneney, Acting Mayor, will preside.

At the dinner there will be from 750 to 1,000 people present. Acting Mayor McAneny will preside, and the speakers will be Secretary of the Navy Daniels, representing the navy; Admiral Fletcher, representing the fleet, and General Leonard Wood, representing the army.

There will be one other speaker, whose name will be announced later. About 250 naval officers have been invited to this dinner, all of whom will appear in uniform. Invitations have also been extended to the members of the Cabinet and distinguished officials of the State and city.

The Navy League of the United States, from its temporary headquarters at the Waldorf-Astoria, plans a welcome to the fleet that will rival that of the city. The league activities began yesterday with a luncheon of the Maritime Section, Manhattan, which was addressed by the Field Secretary, Dr. Edward Breck, on the general military condition of the country, and the league's plans for the coming ten days.

The annual meeting of the league takes place this afternoon at 3 o'clock at the Waldorf-Astoria. After the meeting the members will listen to a lecture by Dr. Breck, on "Battleships, Past and Present," illustrated with lantern slides.

The most important day of the fleet's visit to New York, from the standpoint of the Navy League, will be Friday, May 14, on the afternoon of which there will be a special reception for the league members and their friends on board the three flagships. The same evening there will take place at the Hotel Ansonia the annual dinner of the league, give in honor of the officers of the fleet, to be followed at 10 o'clock by a ball for league members and the officers of the fleet. Admiral and Mrs. Fletcher and many of the higher navy officers have already accepted invitations for both the dinner and the ball.

MAHARAJA TO SEE COUNTRY.

On His Way to Frisco in Private Car He Will Visit Big Cities.

The Maharajah of Kapurthala has chartered a private car from the Pullman Company, and will leve next Wednesday over the Pennsylvania Railroad for California. Stops will be made at Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Chicago, Denver, Colorado Springs, Salt Lake City, Grand Canyon, Ariz., San Diego, Los Angeles, and San Francisco.

After visiting the Panama-Pacific Exposition the Maharajah will return to New York via Portland, Ore., Van Couver, B. C., and the Canadian Pacific Railway. He expects to sail for Liverpool on the Cunarder Mauretania on July 10. The Ranee Prem Kaur and his son, Karamgit Singh, will accompany him.

The Maharajah said that he wishes his son to have a good knowledge of the United States and Canada, and is taking him over the same ground that he himself traveled twenty-two years ago. The private car, with servants and meals for the two months, will cost the Maharajah about $7,000. One of the representatives of Thomas Cook & Son will travel with the party to carry out the arrangements at the various stopping points.

SAYS HE IS BITTER'S SON.

23-Year-Old Chauffeur Objects to Sculptor's Will.

Carl Bitter, 23 years old, chauffeur to a wealthy Manhattan family, appeared through counsel in the Surrogate's Court yesterday and asked for permission to intervene as a son of Karl Bitter the sculptor, in order to object to the probate of the sculptor's will. The motion will be argued before Surrogate Cohalan today.

No such person is mentioned in the will of the sculptor or in the petition asking for its probate. The only children named are Francis T. R., John F., and C. E. Marietta Bitter, all under 14 years of age. They enjoy remainder interests of the estate of more than $15,000 after the death of their mother, Mrs. Marie A. Bitter of 44 West Seventy-seventh Street, who enjoys the income for life from the entire estate.

Jacquin Frank of 41 Park Row, attorney for the young man, said yesterday that his client was the son of the sculptor by a common law marriage which occurred twenty-four years ago. The young man was born on Aug. 29, 1892, in Palenville, at the foot of the Catskill Mountains, the attorney said. The latter also referred reporters to the Children's Aid Society, where the records show that the boy was 15 years old on Jan. 30, 1908, when the society sent him to Texas, where he was provided with a good home. His father's name is given in the record as "Carl Bitter, sculptor, Hoboken, N. J."

The boy was sent to Texas at the request of his mother, who is recorded in the society's books as Mrs. Adelaide Omar. She is now the wife of Douglas E. Rockefeller, known on the stage as Douglas Omar, who is playing at a Coney Island show place, where he started to work on Saturday. The young man's mother assumes the stage name of Mlle. Margina. She lives at 351 West Twenty-fifth Street.

George H. Emerson, one of the executors of the Bitter estate, through his attorney, Charles Burlingham of 27 William Street, denies that the young man is the son of the sculptor.

BARNARD GIRLS GIVE PICNIC.

100 Settlement Children Entertained by Students—Close Elections.

The Philanthropic Association of Barnard College entertained more than 100 settlement children on their campus yesterday afternoon. The guests, who ranged from 5 to 10 years old, rolled on the grass and played all sorts of games. This exercise gave them huge appetites for the ics cream cones and lolly pops which followed.

Miss Carol R. Lorenz, President of the Y. W. C. A., and Miss Beatric Lowndes, President-elect, aided by a number of other young women, conducted this picnic party.

Alumnae officers, for three-year term: President, Eleanore G. Lonria, '15; Vice President, Sarah S. Butler, '15; Treasurer, Elizabeth Palmer, '15; Secretary, Ray E. Levi, '15. Editor-in-Chief Mortarboard, Cornelia Geer, '17; Editor Bulletin, Carol Weiss, '16; Editor Bear, Katherine McGiffert, '16.

HUERTA HAS LECROIX HOUSE

New Home of ex-President of Mexico is Fine Long Island Estate.

The home at Forest Hills, L. I., that General Victoriano Huerta has leased is that of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Lecroix, on Seminole Avenue. It overlooks the valley from Flushing Bay to the Highlands, and is one of the finest estates in that section of Long Island. General Huerta's wife, together with their thirty children and grandchildren, will arrive in New York the latter part of next week, and as soon as they are here the Huertas will move into the Lecroix mansion.

Abraham Z. Ratner, who is General Huerta's financial representative, said last night that he would open his new offices in the Adams Express Building a week from next Monday. Mr. Ratner will be the head of a banking and investment company to be known as the A. Z. Ratner Investment Company. General Huerta, according to Mr. Ratner, will not be a partner in the company.

JERSEY ELECTION ASSURED.

Governor Signs the Bill for a Vote on Woman Suffrage.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., May 6.—Governor Fielder today signed the bill passed at this week's special session of the Legislature, providing for a special election Oct. 19 on woman suffrage and other proposed amendments to the State Constitution.

The Governor will leave New Jersey Saturday for the Panama-Pacific Exposition, and Senate President Edge will be sworn in as Acting Executive.

IN NEW JERSEY.

JERSEY CITY.—The recount of the Bayonne Commission Government vote was finished by the Board of Elections yesterday. Pierre P. Garven finished with a lead of 33, and Matthew T. Cronin with a lead of 25 votes over former Mayor Bart Daly, who had asked for the recount.

ELIZABETH.—Mrs. Mary Dowling and her daughter Annie, 4 years old, of 68 First Street, are in the General Hospital suffering as the result of burns from a fire in the yard of their home yesterday. The child may die.

SUMMIT.—The refusal of the strike-breakers yesterday to accept the proposition to work in night shifts has brought back the strike situation to the point where it was five weeks ago. The strikers had agreed to return to work if the strike-breakers worked alone in the night shift.

WHITEHOUSE.—Orlando Apgar, working in the W. H. Roger & Son's flour and feed mill, was caught in a grinding machine and killed before other men could shut off the power.

TRENTON—New Jersey's new State-wide traffic law, applying to all roads and streets, went into effect yesterday.

TRENTON—According to a report filed yesterday there were forty-eight suicides in the State during the month of April. Cancer caused 390 deaths.

JUDGE INVESTIGATES SLADE-WOOD FIGHT

Safford's Lawyer Makes a Formal Complaint on the Row in the Courtroom.

ALLEGES HE WAS ATTACKED

District Attorney Marshall Making an Investigation as a Basis for the Judicial Decision.

Benjamin Slade, the lawyer who asserts he was struck by Assistant United States District Attorney Wood after Slade's client, Franklin D. Safford, had been convicted of perjury in the Federal Court on Wednesday night, appeared yesterday before Judge Hough in his chambers on the twelfth floor of the Woolworth Building and made a formal complaint of the alleged attack. Mr. Slade was accompanied by his brother, David Slade, and half a dozen witnesses to the encounter, who refused to give their names. Judge Hough heard the complaint and told Mr. Slade that he would take the matter under advisement and report his decision within a few days.

Shortly after the Slade brothers had left the Judge's chambers, United States District Attorney Marshall, Mr. Wood, and Joseph G. Cassell, who was juror No. 3 in the Safford trial and a witness to the altercation, went before Judge Hough. Mr. Marshall gave the results of an investigation he had made and promised the Judge to report to him again today or tomorrow after further investigation.

After seeing Judge Hough, Mr. Slade said he did not intend to institute any civil or criminal proceedings against Mr. Wood.

"My only purpose," he said, "is to call the attention of Judge Hough to the conduct of one of the officials in his courtroom. Mr. Wood's attack on me was unprovoked. As I was about to leave the courtroom after the verdict I saw Mr. Wood talking to juror No. 3, and I heard words that sounded like, 'You did a good job; thank you.' At the same time, Mr. Wood seized me by the right arm and then struck me with his right hand, the blow landing on my forehead. The juror shouted, 'It's an outrage,' and then several deputy marshals seized me and pushed me violently into the hall. Mr. Wood yelled, 'Throw him out,' and they did it. Talk about Siberia. I've been a lawyer for twenty years, but I never heard of anything like this taking place in a court building."

When asked to comment on the incident, Mr. Marshall said:

"I am going to make a thorough investigation to find out who punched, who was punched and whether there was any punching. I have had a talk with Mr. Wood and Mr. Cassell, and their accounts are different from that given by Benjamin Slade. Mr. Wood tells me that after the verdict he was talking to Mr. Cassell in the presence of Mr. Hershenstein and several others when Benjamin Slade, in a sneering manner, said, 'So you are having a private conference with the juror.' Mr. Wood said Slade pushed forward and that his attitude was insulting and aggressive. Mr. Wood says he thinks he then struck at Slade, but he is not sure whether he hit him or not. Mr. Wood admits he called to a marshal to put Slade out."

Mr. Cassell, who, besides having been a witness to the encounter between Mr. Wood and Mr. Slade, was the juror quoted as threatening to "punch in" the face of Harry J. Kendrigen, the foreman of the jury, said yesterday that he had made no serious threat at all.

"Why, Harry Kendrigen and I are old friends," he said. "After the little excitement at the court room door several reporters and a crowd of spectators were besieging me so that I could hardly move. Hendrigen managed to reach my side and said, 'Come on, let's get out of this.' Then, simply because every one seemed to be threatening every one else. I jokingly said, 'Look out, Harry, I'll punch your face in.' It was all a joke, and Kendrigen and I went home together."

Mr. Cassell added that there was no wrangling among the Safford jurors, but that the verdict had been reached calmly after an exhaustive review of the evidence in the case.

It was announced at the offices of Slade & Slade, 200 Broadway, that the Safford case was only the beginning of their fight, and a similar announcement was made at the office of the United States District Attorney. When Safford is arraigned for sentence before Judge Hough on Monday his case will be appealed, but beyond this Slade & Slade would not say what they intended to do. No official announcement was made by the Government, but it was understood that its next step in the case against David Slade, Maxwell Slade, McCullough, Safford, Rae Tanzer and her two sisters would be the trial of Rae Tanzer for perjury.

CITY BREVITIES.

At a dinner last night in the Hotel St. Regis a silver loving cup was presented to Michael Furst by the Justices of the Municipal Courts of Manhattan and Brooklyn in appreciation of his work as Chairman of the Board of Justices.

The first murder trial to be held in the old County Court House in many years began yesterday when the selection of a jury was begun to try Luigi Vitondo, charged with killing Genaro Alfano on Dec. 26 last. Justice Shearn will preside. Two manslaughter trials have already been disposed of. Both resulted in acquittal.

Charles Randall was held in $1,000 bail by Commissioner Houghton yesterday, charged with having three bottles of morphine in his possession. He said he was holding them as security for a loan. It was necessary to give him a tonic before arraignment.

Charities Commissioner Kingsbury announced yesterday that as a result of strong representations made to saloon keepers concerning their sale of liquor to the inmates of the City Home in Brooklyn and the Farm Colony at Staten Island, it is now impossible for even the employes to obtain drinks.

William Dehart of 90 South Avenue, Staten Island, an electrical engineer, while testing a punching machine yesterday was pulled into the machine when a cog caught in his clothing. He was terribly mangled before the machinery could be stopped.

PREPARES FRANK'S PLEA.

Prison Board Likely to Hear It on May 19—Classmates Sign Petition.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga., May 6.—Although the State Prison Commission has set no date for the hearing of Leo M. Frank's petition for a commutation of his sentence and will not set a date until after Frank is resentenced by Judge Ben H. Hill, it is expected that the commission will consider Frank's petition about May 19.

This expectation is based upon the fact that the mandate of the United States Supreme Court reached Atlanta today. The hearing before the Prison Commission probably will extend over two or three days, and for this reason the commission will hardly delay it until its regular June meeting, the calendar for which already promises to be a heavy one.

H. A. Alexander, of Frank's counsel was at the courthouse today to obtain the record of the extraordinary motion for a new trial for Frank. This indicated that some of the evidence introduced at that hearing might be used before the prison commission.

Among the many petitions to the Governor for a commutation of Frank's sentence, which are being daily received at the Executive office, is one signed by the members of the Cornell Alumni Association of Western Pennsylvania.

Frank is a Cornell graduate and many of the signers, who knew him personally, prefixed to their signatures short notes to the Governor, dealing with the reputation of the man when he was their fellow-student at the university.

STARVING MAN ARRESTED.

Ate Twenty-three Rolls and Much Other Food at Policeman's Expense.

Detective Campbell found a middle-aged man begging yesterday morning on Cortland Street and placed him under arrest. On their way to the police station the man seemed unable to keep pace with the policeman, who asked him if he wouldn't hurry a little.

"I can't," the man said. "I'm all in. Nothing to eat for two days. I haven't had a really square meal for weeks."

The detective looked at the drawn face of his prisoner and decided that he was speaking the truth. eH took the man into a restaurant on Cortland Street and told him to order what he wanted. The prisoner studied at the bill and then looked appealingly at Detective Campbell.

"Go ahead," Campbell said. "Take anythin gyou want."

The prisoner ordered and Campbell watched him in amazement as quantities of food disappeared into his mouth.

"He started with two dishes of mush," Campbell said later before Magistrate Marsh in the Tombs Court. "Then he ordered six scrambled eggs. With them he ate twenty-three rolls and drank three cups of coffee."

The prisoner said he was Charles Euges, 55 years old, married, and with five children in Canada. He said he was once employed as a foreman in the Panama Canal construction. Magistrate Marsh sent him to the workhouse for thirty days.

POPE SENDS AN APPEAL.

Benedict XV. Writes of Need to Complete College at Rome.

The Rev. Charles P. Grannan of 113 East 117th Street, member of the Pontifical Biblical Commission, has received from Pope Benedict XV. an appeal for aid from the United States for the Collegio Pio Latino at Rome. The letter is in Latin and is signed by the Pontiff himself. Dr. Grannan has just returned from Europe.

The prelate urges the parishes of the United States to help complete the college in order to train more young priests at the Urban College for work in Latin-America.

"And although your skillful management has already borne fair fruitage," the Pope's letter reads, "still the circumstances of the institute are so straightened that the supply of ordained workers fails to meet the needs of the harvest, which increases day by day in the diocese of Latin-America. We are fully aware that the Bishops are laboring zealously to meet this deficiency and, while their efforts, as you know, benefit individual dioceses, it has nevertheless become evident that the welfare of th Univrsal Church requires us to secure for every diocese priests who have been thoroughly and soundly instructed in Catholic doctrine and discipline by Rome, the mother and mistress of all the churches."

HAMBURG LINE SHIPS SOLD.

Sarnia and Sibiria Purchased by Atlantic Fruit Company.

William G. Sickels, General Manager and Resident Director of the Hamburg-American Line, said yesterday that the two steamships Sarnia and Cibiria, owned by the company, had beensold to the Atlantic Fruit Company of 61 Broadway. The purchase price was paid on Monday last and the transfer of the ships from German to American registry is imminent.

The Sarnia was built in 1892, in England, and is a single-screw steamship of 3,402 gross tonnage, 350 feet long. The Sibiria was built in 1894 and is a single-screw steamship of 3,535 gross tonnage, 357 feet long.

In shipping circles it is believed that the ships were sold for $75,000 each.

RULE ON COMPOSITE CARS.

Service Board Orders Removal Regardless of Their Use on Elevated.

The Public Service Commission took action yesterday to prevent the Interborough from making the removal of the composite cars from the subway conditional on their use on the elevated lines.

The company has made application for permission to use the composite bodies; eliminated from the subway, on lighter steel frames on the elevated lines, and th Commission has that under consideration; but it is determined that, whatever may be its decision on this matter, the subway shall be cleared of all but steel cars forthwith.

STEVEDORE GENIUS SEES WEALTH NEAR

CUTS THE TIME IN HALF

Carries Fuel from Barge to Any Desired Spot in Vessel's Hold and Stows It.

Louis A. De Mayo has just won a long contest in the courts that makes valid his claim to being the inventor of a coal-loading apparatus that will reduce the time and cost of coaling vessels to about one-third of that expended under old methods. The inventor is nearly 61 years old. He came to this country as a boy before the mast and got a job as a longshoreman. Fifteen years ago he became a chief stevedore of the International Mercantile Marine.

It was his duty to see that vessels were promptly loaded and unloaded and coaled. This work was done then and is still done by means of a steam scoop with fifteen men to operate it, and the time consumed is from two to three days.

This was slow work and it bothered De Mayo. He finally conceived the idea that coal could be lifted from barges and placed in any desired part of the hold by a hollow steel tube carrying an endless chain of scoops that would discharge their loads through a movable arm into any opening in the side of the ship. He began to work out this idea with full knowledge that the upright must be movable so that it would rise and fall with the barge and ship.

Finally he finished a model. It represented an apparatus that, when finished, would weigh about seven tons. It could be picked up with a derrick on the vessel and set down in the barge of coal at the side of the vessel. On the chains holding it it would have free movement of ten feet up or down. The carrying chain was operated by electricity, and as the scoops were filled the weight of the apparatus would sink the upright still further into the load, and so find a supply until all the coal in a certain radius was transferred into the hold of the vessel. Then the upright could be lifted and dropped into another part of the load, and so on until the job was done.

Mr. De Mayo began work on this model in 1904, and the following year got out his first patents. Other patents covering improvements, were procured in 1905 and 1908. Then a few contracts were made with companies anxious to use the machine. Then came imitators, and the courts were asked to protect the inventor. George B. Holbert, Mr. De Mayo's counsel, said that the legal battle is about over. Judge Hand of the Federal Court, in a decision given in an action to restrain infringements of the patents, said:

"By means of these elevators the largest ocean liners can be coaled with 8,000 or 9,000 tons of coal inside of twenty-four hours. By reason of this fact and the apparent adaptation of all the elements set forth, I think the success is reasonably to be attributed to all the elements in co-operation."

Since Mr. De Mayo's rights have been confirmed, he has received offers for the use of his device which insure that he will soon be wealthy.

Who was Marie Dupont?

A stranger jostles her on the street and apologizes in French. She utters four French words with the faultless accent of a Parisienne. Then, in a flash she can neither speak nor understand French!

Who pulled the veil? What is behind the veil?

Outwardly she charms men with the radiance of her uncommon beauty, but beyond the threshold of her deep mystery no man can enter.

Rich, young, adorable she seems to possess the life enchanted. Yet she herself is possessed by a super-enchantment.

Take the night of the dance: What unearthly power gives her that tantalizing rhythm—that glorious abandon till she seems the very spirit of dance incarnate!

The next instant?

Men look and marvel. "Can this be the same Marie Dupont?" they ask. What is the secret of her secret? Does Marie Dupont dimly suspect it herself—yet for the life of her cannot rightly sense or fathom it?

Unravel this mystery yourself in the great new mystery novel of the year by Adele Luehrmann. Starts this issue of EVERY WEEK. Don't miss it.

CHANCE AND TINKER OUTGUESS 'MATTY'

"Big Six's" Wrist Motion a Sign as to How Cubs Should Hit.

By FRANK L. CHANCE.

A simple twist of Mathewson's wrist partly caused New York to lose a National League pennant and incidentally helped the Cubs to land that banner and a world's championship.

As this story is to deal with the art of hitting it does not appear at first as if the foregoing had anything to do with the subject at hand, but, as a matter of fact, it has everything to do with it.

This can readily be explained by the simple statement that nine out of ten good hitters "call the turn" on a pitcher. "Calling the turn" really means either that you "outguess" the pitcher—that is, that you are able to guess correctly as to whether he intends serving you with a fast ball, a curve or a slow ball, or that you are able to tell what he is sending up to you by some motion he makes in the box when delivering the ball to the plate.

Now we come back to the original statement.

Much has been written and said about Joe Tinker's uncanny ability to hit the great Matty. I suppose this has caused as much speculation among close followers of the game as any other single topic concerning a man's hitting prowess.

Joe Tinker was able to hit almost any ball Matty pitched to him because he was able to tell what Matty was throwing by the queer twist the big New York pitcher gave his wrist when he was throwing his curve ball. Joe was death on Matty's famous "fadeaway" for this very reason. I also had the knack of reading Matty's pitching motions. Not one time out of ten could he "cross" me.

When the Cubs went to New York on that memorable occasion to play off the tie for the National League pennant, we faced a hostile crowd. The New York fans were raging because we had tied their team through that historic blunder made by Fred Merkle when he failed to touch second base.

There is no use to recall the story of that game. Sufficient to say that Joe and myself straightened out Matty's "fadeaway" at opportune moments, and the other members of the Cubs cut and slashed away at his offerings, at the same time displaying such brilliancy and dash in both attack and defense that the Giants were beaten. We jumped from there to Detroit and started our series with the Tigers which gave us a world's championship.

Cobb is a great hitter and the principal reason he is such a wonderful batsman is because he can "outguess" the pitcher. Cobb never did much hitting against Mordecai Brown, and one reason was because the three-fingered wonder had him guessing all the time he was at the plate.

A good hitter watches a pitcher like a hawk watches its intended prey. If you have been hitting against that pitcher in a number of games he knows your weakness. He knows what balls are hardest for you to hit. It behooves you to be on the watch for just that sort of a ball every time the pitcher winds up. Of course, he will "mix them up" on you, but you know that when he really expects you to hit he will put the ball in a certain place.

When I came into the big league I was weak on curve balls. I grasped my bat out toward the end of the handle and stood at the plate with my feet close together. Then I would take a good healthy swing at the ball. Generally when I hit it I would drive a long fly to left field.

Bill Lange, a great friend of mine, who was playing centre field on the team at the time, spoke to me about my method of hitting.

"You will have to change your manner of batting, Frank," he said, "or you will never be able to hit these pitchers."

Now a man who has the fault I had has to do two things. He has got to stand differently at the plate and also hold his bat differently. I began "choking" my bat and standing up to the plate with my feet well apart. When I stepped into a ball I never stepped over a foot with my left foot. I began chopping at the ball and hitting at it with a sort of cricket-like motion of the bat.

With long hours of practice and good coaching on Lange's part I soon began to hit. I changed myself in a short time from a left field hitter into a pronounced right field hitter, and then I entered the ranks of the .300 hitters, where I stayed as long as I played.

Of course the pitchers saw the change in my hitting and instead of feeding me on the curves they used to serve me, they began shooting them in close to me. I always waited for a ball to break before I hit it, and when the pitchers kept keeping them close in they began hitting me in the head, and for this reason I was always a target and was injured more times than I like to recall.

Long hitters or batters who drive the ball with terrific force grasp the bat well out toward the end of the handle. A man who chokes his bat does not hit them so far, as he chops at the ball. However, when a hitter chokes his bat he is able to judge a curve ball better.

THE KENTUCKY DERBY.

A Remarkable Field Ready for This Year's Race at Churchill Downs.

The $15,000 Kentucky Derby, which will be run tomorrow at Churchill Downs, marking the opening of the forty-first annual Spring meeting of the New Louisville Jockey Club, is attracting more interest this season than has ever attended the event in the history of racing in the Blue Grass State. Annually for many years past this event has been looked upon as the biggest race in the United States, and the glamour that surrounds this year's race eclipses the previous races by far.

The big stake will open the season for the New Louisville Jockey Club, which runs this year twelve racing days, winding up on Friday, May 21, when the Kentucky Oaks, for three-year-old fillies, will be decided. During the days between the running of the Derby and the Oaks five other stakes will be decided, all of which have long been fixtures at this, the greatest of all Kentucky tracks. These embrace the historic Clark Handicap and Frank Fehr Stakes, for three-year-olds and upward, and the Bashford Manor and Débutante. As a side issue to the big stakes to be run off during the twelve days of the meeting, each day there will be six overnight purses and handicaps, and seven such races on the days there are no stake events for decision, as this Spring, for the first time in the history of racing in Kentucky, the New Louisville Jockey Club will have a daily program of seven big races.

With such an attractive card, the coming meeting at Churchill Downs is drawing to Kentucky this season the stables of all the big figures of the Eastern turf, some of whom have never before raced horses in Kentucky, or, in fact, south of Maryland. Another feature of the meeting at Churchill Downs this season is the fact that, as a result of extensive improvements, especially in the grandstand and betting inclosure, between 8,000 and 10,000 more people can see the racing comfortably.

Racing at Churchill Downs now is the highest form of turf sport. Under the pari-mutuel system of betting the great gambling element has been practically eliminated. The plungers of bookmaking days have passed out of the game, and the sport is now on a basis which was but a dream of the real turfmen of long ago.

Looking backward over all the Derby races run in the United States it is difficult to find a counterpart of what the Kentucky Derby bids fair to be this Spring. It is very probable that even in numbers the field will break all previous records, while in class the like has never before been quite so great. The greatest number of starters that ever went to the post in this race was in its inaugural year, 1875, when fifteen three-year-olds faced the starter.

This season there are more than double that number in active training for the rich prize, and, up to date, none of this number has gone wrong in preparation. They embrace practically every performer in America that made brilliant turf history in 1914 as two-year-olds, and are as well the winners of all the big kindergarten stakes of their year.

It is now a certainty that the big field will come from the following eligibles for the event, and at the present moment it is impossible to say that any one of this number will not go to the post; Peebles, Last Coin, Kilkenny Boy, Regret, Prince Henry, Spun Glass, Phosphor, Sharpshooter, Trojan, Double Eagle, Ed Crump, Lindenthal, For Fair, Leo Ray, Chalmers, Little String, Sam McMeekin, Dortch, Garbage, Commonada, Liberator, Manager Waite, imp. Royal II., imp. First Fiddle, imp. Hanworth, Pif, Jr., Emerson Cochran, and Quincy.

So there might actually be twenty starters in the Derby this year as, besides the above, there are some unknown quantities in the event that may develop Derby form in either training or racing in the next ten days.

MOTOR BOAT RESTRICTIONS

Schuylkill Oarsmen Plan Protective Measures Against Larger Craft.

To better the conditions of boating on the Schuylkill River, committees of the Schuylkill Navy and the Schuylkill Nautical Association met recently in Philadelphia, and a series of rules were drafted for the control of all kinds of craft on the Schuylkill River. These regulations, if concurred in by the respective organizations, will be presented to the Park Commission with a request for adoption.

The plan under way is that power boats use the east side of the river going up and the west side coming down; that all boats remain, as far as practicable, fifty feet from all passing shells, and that passing boat house row they shall keep 100 feet distant from the clubhouse slips; that boats when passing shells reduce their speed to a point to make the least wash. The question of the speed regulations was left to the owners of power boats, to run their crafts so as to cause the least disturbance.

The rowing men conceded an important point to the power boat owners, by agreeing to open the course at least two intervals on race days, in order to permit power boats to make their way up or down the river to continue a journey. The plan is to allow the course to be open forty-five minutes after the start of the races, and at another period about one hour after the first interval.

It was also decided that in case of accidents between power boats, canoes, and rowing shells a committee is to be appointed by each organization to hear evidence jointly and fix the blame and responsibility. The resolutions also contain clauses requiring canoes and all kinds of boats to carry lights that may be visible from every direction. No boats are to be permitted to anchor at any time on the east side of Peters Island.

ROWING—WOMEN'S GOLF—LAWN TENNIS RESULTS—BOXING

COLUMBIA CREW ROWS BEST ON LAKE

Pennsylvania Shows Poor Form, but Princeton Does Well in Practice.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., May 6.—Of the three crews that rowed on Lake Carnegie today in preparation for Saturday's race, the Columbia eight looked the smoothest and showed the most finished watermanship. The Blue and White oarsmen, although of lighter build than the Pennsylvania or Princeton crews, showed every evidence of Rice's coaching. In this morning's workout the New Yorkers apparently had difficulty getting accustomed to the characteristic calm on Lake Carnegie, after the usual rough going on the Hudson. This afternoon there was a big improvement, and the crew swept through its time trial in almost perfect form. The men had plenty of reserve power at the finish, although they wound up with a hard spurt.

Pennsylvania took only one spin on the water today, the Red and Blue 'Varsity and Freshmen crews rowing over the mile and seven-eights course in the afternoon. Coach Nickalls's men gave evidence of a good deal of raggedness, their blade work showing a marked lack of smoothness in contrast with the work of the Columbians. The men were splashing at the finish, and indicated that Nickalls has a good deal of work ahead of him in the short time left before the race.

The Princeton 'Varsity and Freshmen crews had their usual daily practice spin. Neither boat rowed a time trial, however, and both took their work easily. The 'Varsity's form was better than Pennsylvania's and not quite so finished as Columbia's.

Tomorrow Columbia and Pennsylvania will take a morning spin over the course, with the probability that each will have a time trial in the afternoon. Princeton's work will be confined to the usual afternoon's practice.

ONE JUDGE FOR BOAT RACE.

Harry A. Fisher to Officiate in Yale-Harvard Regatta June 25.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 6.—The Harvard rowing authorities made public today the completed ararngements for the annual Harvard-Yale reagtta on the Thames River at New London, Conn., June 25.

The 'Varsity eight-oared race will be rowed up-stream, starting from the drawbridge at 4:30 P. M., and finishing opposite the Harvard quarters, four miles up the river. If weather or water conditions require, the race may be postponed from time to time until 6:30 P. M., after which it will have to go over until the following afternoon.

Owing to the uncertainty which resulted from the close finish last year, when Yale was declared a winner by 4 inches, only one judge will be stationed at the finish. Harry A. Fisher of Columbia, has been chosen for this position, with N. Otis Rockwood as a substitute. W. H. Mickeleham, an old Columbia oarsman, has again been selected as referee.

The two preliminary events, the races for 'Varsity substituted and freshman eights, will be started opposite the Navy Yard and will finish at the drawbridge. The substitutes' crews will be sent away at 10:15 A. M., and the freshman eights half an hour later.

DARLING'S SCULL WINS.

Worcester Oarsman Champion of Harvard—Sophs Take Class Race.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 6.—F. P. Darling of Worcester, won the single sculling championship of Harvard College in a race of a mile and seven-eighths on the Charles River basin today. With S. A. Robinson of Hawaii, who finished second, he will represent the Crimson in a race with the two leading Yale representatives on May 15.

The class championship was won by the Sophmore eignt, who defeated the Juniors by half a length, and the Senior crew by nearly five lengths. The Sophomores will race the champion Blue crew on the same date.

TRACK AND FIELD 'CHAMPS.'

Committees to Select Places and Dates for Seniors and Juniors.

A date for the senior Metropolitan track and field championships probably will be set at a meeting of the Senior Track and Field Committee called yesterday by Chairman Farley to be held next Thursday night at Amateur Athletic Union headquarters, 21 Warren Street. The chief question to be decided is whether the games should be contested before or aftr the national championships at the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco in August. The majority of the committee favors holding them prior to the national sports, and also before the try-outs will be held for the national championships. These will take place in the latter part of June, and therefore it is more than likely that the seniors will be scheduled for about the middle of June.

As the Irish-American A. C. staged the sports at Celtic Park last June, the New York A. C. and Travers Island appear in line for them this Summer. The members of the committee who meet are Terence Farley, Chairman; J. M. Connolly, H. L. Dibblee, G. P. Mathews, H. J. Smith, P. J. Walsh, J. J. Archer, F. J. V. Delany, J. J. Deignan, Mathew P. Halpin, Arthur McAleenan, Sr., J. F. Reherman, P. A. Sayles, A. F. Tully, J. J. Walsh, W. H. Wilson, Bartow S. Weeks, and Herman Obertubessing.

Fred J. V. Delany, Chairman of the Junior Track and Field Committee, has not decided when he will assemble his associates, but the meeting will very likely take place the night after the senior session.

No clubs as yet have made bids for either of the championships, nor for the try-outs.

MERIT SYSTEM AT FORDHAM.

Plan to Elect Athletic Managers Each Year May Be Adopted.

The question whether Fordham will apply the new "merit" system in its choice of future athletic managers will be finally decided at the May meeting of the Maroon Executive Committee this afternoon. For some time there has been dissatisfaction among the students because of the men elected to the administrative berths at Fordham. Under the present system, which has been in vogue for years, one assistant manager would be elected in each branch of sport, and after the graduation of the manager the assistant would step into his shoes without any opposition. During the last decade, however, several men have gained the assistant managerships more through popularity than through real ability.

As a result of these conditions, Walter Lynch, the present baseball executive, has proposed a new rule, whereby three assistant managers will be elected. They will serve a year, helping the manager and competing against each other. At the end of the probationary period the assistant who has shown the most ability will be chosen by the Faculty Director and the Executive Committee to fill in the managership.

This plan has been before the students for a month, and, despite some strong opposition, has gained the support of the alumni and the majority of the undergraduates. Manager Lynch modeled his scheme after the plan used at Georgetown and Yale.

COFFEY "OUT STANDING UP."

Reich Might Have Won Had He Followed His Advantage in Second.

Billy Roche, the Madison Square Garden referee, declared last night that Jim Coffey was "out standing up" in the second round of his fight with Al Reich Wednesday night, and added that it only needed one more punch from Reich to "knock Coffey cold," when Apollo Al suddenly made the fatal mistake of changing his tactics. Said Roche:

"Coffey went back on his heels, his eyes were glazed and I was getting ready to count ten over his prostrate form. It was so abvious to all near the ring that another punch would have dropped Coffey, that I could not believe my eyes when I saw Reich back away instead of crashing in with the wallop that would have brought him a fortune. But, right there was shown the great improvement wrought in this Irish giant by working with Joe Jeannette. A year ago Coffey would not have come back. But last night the Celt took immediate advantage of Reich's momentary lapse of grit, shook his head as if to dislodge the cobwebs and then rushed Reich right off his feet. And there, less than a minute after I was getting ready to count out Coffey I stood counting over Reich when the bell rang. The blow that felled Reich in the second round really won the fight for Coffey in the third. I could see that Reich had not fully regained his head when the third started, and the men in Coffey's corner saw it, too, for they sent Jim out to win then and there. When Reich's guard was high I heard Joe Jeannette shout: 'In the body,' and Coffey brought over that terrific left swing that won him the best big fight I've seen in years."

The downfall of Reich and the rise of Coffey was the sole talk in sport circles yesterday. Everywhere sympathy was epressed for Maxey Blumenthal, Reich's friend, backer and manager. It is a fact that since Blumenthal took a liking to Reich as an amateur boxer that he has spent thousands of dollars, not counting his time, trying to make him world's heavyweight champion. He never took a cent of Reich's winnings, although the agreement between them called for "50-50."

"My half, when he's world champion," Blumenthal would say, "will repay me for everything." And Wednesday night, when the Irish hosts cut the leash on Bedlam, with the seconds working to bring Reich back to life, Maey Blumenthal stood up in the corner and smiled under the wallop fate had dealt him. Then he patted Reich on the shoulder and said: "Never mind, Al, we're still pals."

St. Nicholas Rink Bouts Tonight.

One of the best looking boxing cards arranged in some time is that for the St. Nicholas Rink tonight, where Jack Hemple, the California heavyweight, will box Jack Reed in the main ten-round bout. George Rodel, the "Boer Warrior," will endeavor to get into the limelight again, and will no doubt try and stop the so-called "Iron Man," Terry Keller, in the second ten-round go. One of the greatest little bantams developed in New York in some time, Willie Astey, is matched with the Corona Kid in the third tilt.

Gunboat Would Fight Willard.

An effort is being made to arrange a bout between Jess Willard and Gunboat Smith. Both men are now in Denver and the negotiations are being carried on by Johnny Corbett, the Denver promoter. Jim Buckley says that Gunboat is read and willing to take on Willard at any distance, and the winner to take all.

NEWS FOR THE BOXERS.

Jimmy Clabby is training at New Dorp, S. I., for his ten-round bout with George Chip, at St. Nicholas A. C., next Tuesday night. With Mike Gibbons to meet the winner at the Rink the first week in June, the boxers have an incentive to be at their best. Clabby expects to enter the ring at 154 pounds. Chip is putting the finishing touches on his training at his home in New Castle, Penn., and will arrive in New York a day before the contest.

Four ten and six round bouts are scheduled for tonight at the 135th Street A. C. The ten round contests will be between Johnny Clinton and Kid Carter, Negro Chink and Kid White, Eddie Clifford and Jimmy Harrington and Harvey Rose and Barney Williams. A special bout has been arranged between Bob Lee and Roy Bennett.

Soldier Bartfield, the U. S. Navy champion, and Jack Toland of Philadelphia, two good walterweights are scheduled to box ten rounds tomorrow night at the Broadway Sporting Club.

The Irving A. C. will stage two ten round bouts for the weekly entertainment tomorrow night. In the first, Bushley Graham and Joe Black will clash, and in the windup Dan (Porky) Flynn of Boston and Jack Hemphill of California will be the principals.

The novelty of a woman in the corner of the ring, seconding a boxer, will be the attraction tonight at the Fairmont A. C. An admirer of Teddy Jacobs will assist in the duties of the seconds in his bout with Jack Sayles. In the main bout of the evening Jack Dorman of the Bronx will box Eddie Butler of Kansas City. The third ten round bout will bring together Eddie Morrisey of Yorkville and Peter Hartley of the Bronx. Jim Coffey, the Roscommon Giant, will second Dorman in his contest with Butler.

Frankie Wagner of Jersey City and Kid Queens are scheduled to box ten rounds tonight at the Queensboro A. C. The semi-final bout will be between Larry Desmond and Frits Heather.

In spite of the fact that Madison Square Garden is billed for moving pictures and announcement had been made that there would be no more fights there until next fall, Nate Lewis, manager of Charley White, the Chicago lightweight, declared last night that he had been offered a bout with Willie Ritchie for White; in the Garden on May 19, provided Ritchie will listen to reason when talking terms.

Scotty Montieth takes Johnny Dundee to Cincinnat today, where Johnny boxes a third session with Frankie Callahan Monday night. Their last two battles were in New York and Brooklyn, The following Saturday night, May 15, Dundee is the headliner at the Irving Club show in Brooklyn against Tommy Houck, the tough Philadelphia lightweight.

Harry Pollock will very likely be named as the Manager of Mike Gibbons, the world's greatest middleweight, in a very few days. Gibbons and Jimmy Clabby will open the big Brighton Beach open air club on Decoration Day, with the winner to fight Young Ahearn at the second big show. The plans also include Coffey vs. Frank Moran on July 3 or 5.

Another Game for Cutler.

Albert G. Cutler won from Thomas J. Gallagher at 18.2 balk-line billiards last night by a score of 300 to 258. Cutler's high runs were 78 and 61, while his average was 12 12-24. Gallagher's high run was 69 and his average was 11.

WOMEN'S TEAM GOLF DOWN TO SEMI-FINALS

Englewood vs. Nassau and Tuxedo vs. Glen Ridge Remaining Matches.

Surviving teams in the championship tournament of the Women's Metropolitan Golf Association turned their attention yesterday to the third round, with the result that the semi-final matches in the chief division will be played next Thursday, as follows: Englewood at Nassau and Tuxedo at Glen Ridge.

In the consolation division, Scarsdale, through a bye, has an easy road into the finals, while Richmond County will go to Essex County for the other match.

The hardest contest of the day in the chief division was at Englewood, where the home combination nosed out Knollwood by one point. Mrs. Lawrence Swift, President of the association, proved a tower of strength for Knollwood, but Mrs. M. D. Paterson, formerly the chief executive, was weak at the finish, and her failure to defeat Miss Elsa Pickhardt was costly. Miss Louise Krug was also off her game, but her side, as it happened, carried her along. She lost to Miss Constance Roberson.

Glen Ridge trounced Montclair 11 to 1, the visiting four finding the breek which is used at no less than seven holes, too much of a mental hazard. There are no such holes at Montclair. In the third atch, for Nassau drew a bye, Tuxedo defeated Apawamis at Rye, 6 points to 3. All of the matches in the consolation division were by comfortable margins. The summary:

Novel Golf Course for Montrose.

SOUTH ORANGE, N. J., May 6.—Residents of the Montrose section of South Orange Village have arranged to lay out a miniature golf course on propertyat Irving Avenue and Scotland Road, in that village. The Scotland Court Golf Club has been organized and the following officers have been elected: President—County Park Commissioner Robert S. Sinclair; Secretary—Elroy Curtis; Treasurer—Frederick H. Smith, 3d. The Executive Board sonsists of Edward N. Loomis, Clarence B. Riker, and Samuel H. Davis. The idea of the miniature course was brought recently by Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair from the Bahama Islands. An expert was engaged and is laying out the course. Play will be started in July. It is believed the course will accommodate twenty members. It will be a nine-hole course, and th distance between the holes will be from ten to sixty-five yards, and it is figured it will take half an hour to make the course.

Ouimet Wins on Oakland Links.

Coming on from Boston a day ahead of time, Francis Ouimet, the national amateur champion, played a social match yesterday over the links of the Oakland Golf Club. The title holder will leave this morning for Baltimore to take part in the invitation tournament of the Baltimore Country Club, beginning next Monday. Ouimet had as a partner his host, Paul H. Moore, and the pair played against Gardiner W. White and the home professional, Willis Collins. Only nine holes could be played in the morning, Moore getting 44, Ouimet 37, White 43, and Collins 39. Later, however, Moore and Ouimet won by 4 up and 3 to play.

Schmidt and McLoughlin Finalists.

OAKLAND, Cal., May 6.—Heinrich Schmidt of the Claremont Club of this city and H. A. McLaughlin of Los Angeles won their matches in the semi-finals of the Panama-Pacific Exposition amateur golf handicap tournament today. They will meet tomorrow in final play. Schmidt won from Warner Sherwood, 5 and 4. McLaughlin defeated H. E. Sanderson of San Francisco, who started with a handicap of two.

L. I. Kennel Club Show May 12.

The final match of the Grand Challenge series given by the Long Island Kennel Club will be held at Bryant Hall, Sixth Avenue and Forty-second Street on Wednesday evening, May 12. It will be an open match show, and the grand challenge trophy will be awarded in addition to a number of special prizes.

Horace Mann Outdoor Games.

Horace Mann School will hold its first set of interscholastic outdoor games at Alumni Field, Broadway and 246th Street, Saturday afternoon of next week. Eighteen track and field events appear on the program. Among the schools which have entered teams are Poly Prep; Barnard, Holbrook, Ethical Culture, Hamilton Institute, St. Paul's and Trinity. Others are expected to enter before closing time. The Horace Mann trophy will be awarded the school registering the largest number of points, which will be scored on a five, three, two and one basis.

English Heavyweight Coming Here.

Frank Moran, Great Britain's heavyweight, is coming to the United States, and will meet all the contenders for Jess Willard's title at the Brighton Beach Sporting Club. Moran, who will attempt to fight his way to the championship, is at present showing in the music halls in England, and as soon as his tour is finished will come here to box the leading American heavyweights.

POINT JUDITH POLO WIN.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., May 6.—The Point Judith polo team, with Alfred Collins, the South American explorer, in the line-up, galloped up from behind and defeated the Aiken quartet today at Bala by the score of 9¼ goals to 8½. The match was the first of a series for cups presented by the Philadelphia Country Club and marked the opening of the season in this city and vicinity.

Aiken had been conceded 4 goals by handicap, and held the lead until the seventh period, when goals by P. S. P. Randolph, Sr., and John R. Fell turned the tide and enabled the heroes of Narragansett Pier and Lakewood to score a victory by a three-quarter goal margin.

In the final period the teams galloped each other to a standstill, neither being able to score. Several times both goals were menaced, and once Charles Coxe Yarnall, who played at No. 1 for Aiken, carried the ball on a double pass, Seward Cary to Hopping, and drove it goalward. A skillful dribble took the sphere a few feet off the line, and another stroke would have won the match, but Yarnall's direction was faulty, and in an overanxious effort to clinch a victory he drove the ball outside the goal post. Scarcely a half minute was left to play, and the ball was carried up the field out of danger by Point Judith. The scores:

BRYN MAWR POLO WIN.

Tournament to be Held June 9 to 19—Cup Conditions.

Entries for the Bryn Mawr polo tournament at Bryn Mawr, Pa., will close this month. Blanks for team entries were sent out yesterday from the office of H. L. Herbert, Chairman of the Polo Association.

The event will last two weeks, from June 5 to 19, inclusive. This annual tournament is rich in trophies, but the two most important ones are the Wootton Challenge Cup, presented by George W. Childs Drexel, and the Fox Hunters Club, which is donated by Robert E. Strawbridge. The former is open to teams of four under the handicap existing when entries close. No team will be required to give another team more then ten goals. It becomes the property of the club winning it three times. The Bryn Mawr team now has two legs on the trophy, the First Troop Philadelphia City Cavalry and the Philadelphia Country Club has one victory each to its credit.

The conditions of the Fox Hunters Cup are virtually the same, with the only difference that no team will be required to give another team more than eight goals.

No regularly scheduled tournament will be held in Washington this season, but the Polo Club, of which Hugh S. Legareé is delegate, will give a horse show. The game is particularly popular at the National Capital, but there is generally difficulty in getting the teams there together, as the eligible players, composed mostly of army officers, never remain there long enough.

While no dates were allotted to Piping Rock, polo will start there in a few days, and practice and special matches will be played throughout the season. Notice will shortly be sent to every player in the association regarding the new rule passed at the last annual meeting in February respecting the registration of mounts, at the same time, when the height of the ponies was raised to 15.1.

All mounts player regularly before Jan. 15, 1915, are entitled to a certificate of registration without measurement. But ponies purchased or becoming the property of players after that date must be registered before June 15 or they will not be tligible to be played in association matches. It is the owners of the latter class that the Polo Association officials are particularly anxious to hear from.

Athletic Field for Manhattan.

Manhattan College is to have a new athletic field at 242d Street and Van Vortlandt Parkway. There is a plot of ground, covering fifteen acres, which will be used for the new field. It is planned to built a stadium and gymnasium in connection with the field. The matter is now in the hands of the Executive Committee. The Manhattan-Seventh Regiment game will be played tomorrow at the grounds of the Clason Point Military Academy.

TENNIS CHAMPION INJURED IN MATCH

Miss Bjurstedt Turns Ankle and Loses Doubles Title in West Side Tournament.

A twisted ankle cost Miss Molla Bjurstedt and her partner the women's double title of the West Side Tennis Club yesterday on the club courts at Forest Hills, L. I. The Norwegian champion and Miss Florence Ballen opposed Mrs. Barger Wallach and Mrs. Marshall McLean in the final round of the domen's doubles, but Miss Bjurstedt with her ankle bandaged and limping badly as the result of her accident in a previous singles match, was heavily handicapped, and unable to play her brilliant game. She made a plucky fight, but in the end Mrs. Wallach and Mrs. McLean won, 7—5, 3—6, 6—4.

It was in the semi-final round of the women's singles that Miss Bjurstedt hurt her ankle. In racing across the court to reach a return from the racquet of her opponent, Mrs. R. J. Pope, she slipped and in an effort to avoid a fall twisted her ankle. In spite of the pain she continued the atch and easily won at 6—1, 6—1. In the lower half of the semi-finals Mrs. Marshall McLean defeated Miss H. French in straight sets. In order to give Miss Bjurstedt all the rest possible Mrs. McLean agreed to play the final round tomorrow afternoon.

One of the best matches of the turnament was played between Watson M. Washburn, the former college player, and Charles M. Bull, Jr., of the Crescent Athletic Club. Although forty-two games were played only two sets were required to decide the contest in favor of Washburn by the score of 11—9, 12—10. Summary:

Women's Singles, Class A, Semi-final Round.—Miss Molla Bjurstedt defeated Mrs. R. J. Pope, 6—1, 6—1; Mrs. Marshall Bjurstedt defeated Mrs. R. J. Pope, 6—1, 6—1; Mrs. Marshall McLean defeated Miss H. French, 6—1, 6—1.

Women's Doubles, Final Round.—Mrs. Barger Wallach and Mrs. Marshall McLean defeated Miss Molla Bjurstedt and Miss Florence Ballin, 7—5, 6—4.

Mixed Doubles, Class B, First Round.—Miss Smith and Mrs. Gifford defeated Miss Kortright and P. Hall, 6—2, 6—2.

Second Round.—Miss Vander Hoef and E. S. Moore defeated Miss Ranney and S. F. Weaver by refault; Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Hill defeated Miss Wayland-Smith and Mr. Leask by refault; Miss Curry and Mr. Mellick defeated Mr. and Mrs. Conklin by default; Miss Taylor and Mr. Pope defeated Miss F. Ballen and C. G. Ballen by default; Miss Molla Bjurstedt and E. S. Moore versus. Mrs. S. F. Weaver and Charles M. Bull, Jr., 9—7, 2—2; unfinished.

Third Round.—Miss Vander Hoef and Mr. Moors defeated E. Hildreth and Miss Morrison, 6—1, 7—5.

Men's Singles, Class A, Second Round.—Alric H. Man, Jr., defeated C. Major, 7—5, 4—6, 8—6; Robert LeRoy defeated G. C. Shafer, 8—6, 8—6, 6—3.

Third Round.—Alric H. Man, Jr., defeated Gustave F. Louchard, 4—6, 6—3, 6—4.

Men's Doubles, Class C, Third Round.—Becker and Cutley defeated Kenyon and Kenyon, 6—3, 6—3.

FOOT RACE IN STREETS.

Record Entry of 1,500 Runners to Start in Evening Mail's Run.

With a record entry list of 1,500 runners, The Evening Mail Modified Marathon will be run through the city streets tomorrow, beginning at 1:30 o'clock. Supreme Court Justice Bartow S. Weeks will start the runers on their long journey.

The runners will race along the Concourse to 165th Street, where they switch into Jerome Avenue, continuing along that thoroughfare to McComos Dam bridge, crossing the Harlem River, thence to 153d Street and Seventh Avenue to 110th Street, east along Central Park to Fifth Avenue, to Fifty-seventh Street, west to Seventh Avenue to Fourteenth, down Fifth Avenue to West Fourth Street, across Lafayette Street to Elm Street, to Record Place, and into the park. The distance measures 200 yards over 13 miles, and the time limit will be 2 hours and 2 0minutes.

Fencing Competition Postponed.

The Dr. Smith "war of foils" contest, scheduled for last night at the Crescent Athletic Club, Brooklyn, was postponed, as only one of the contestants put in an appearance. Two others were ill and one on his wedding trip. The events will be held in conjunction with the novice foils competition, which will take place on May 20.

Morristown Horse Show Dates.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., May 6.—Announcement was made today by the Horse Show Committee of the Morristown Field Club that the annual horse show would be held on its grounds on Oct. 7, 8, and 9. This will be the eighteenth show, and a few new features are to be introduced. As the International Show will not be held in London this year, owing to the war, many American breeders and exhibitors are expected to enter the local affair.

NEW YORK CLUBS DEFEAT BOSTON'S TWO TEAMS—PHILLIES DEFEAT DODGERS

Those Yanks won another game up at the Polo Grounds yesterday, after fighting the Boston Red Sox tooth and nail for thirteen innings. Doc Cook, with a healthy smash to right, sent Hugh High over the plate with the winning run when one man was out in the thirteenth. The score was 4 to 3. It was the first extra-inning game of the season, and about 5,000 fans were worked up to mid-August enthusiasm over the tussle.

The Bostons looked like sure enough winners up to the ninth inning. At that time Boston was leading 3 to 2. In the last of the ninth, with two out, Daniel Boone set off some fireworks with a two-base slam to centre which scored Doc Cook with the tying run. About this time Cy Pieh went in to pitch for the Yankees, and too much cannot be said about Pieh's efforts in the pitching line. He held the threatening Red Sox in check and mowed them down in order when they had desperate designs on the game. He did a smart piece of work in the eleventh inning, when the Sox got two men on bases. Pieh tightened up and retired the side on strike-outs.

For Boston, the big left-handed pitcher, Babe Ruth, was all that a pitcher is supposed to be, and some more. He put his team into the running in the third inning by smashing a mighty rap into the upper tier of the right-field grand stand. Ruth also had two other hits to his credit. His pitching throughout was of high order, and it was only after the hardest kind of effort that the Yanks were able to break through his service.

Boston introduced an accomplished new infielder in McNally, who cavorted playfully around third base. Charley Wagner has returned to the game and is now playing second base and the Red Sox line-up looks like a formidable combination. The team is handicapped, however, because of the absence of Joe Wood, Vean Gregg and Leonard from active service.

Jack Warhop's pitching was not badly abused by the Bostons. They did not hit him very often, but when they did connect, the ball seemed to have every intention of going out of the lot. Ruth was the first batsman to face Warhop in the third inning and with no apparent effort he slammed a home run into the grand stand.

The Yankees tied the score in the fourth inning. Cook was safe on Wagner's error and he stole second. Peck popped to Wagner and Boone was safe on McNally's weird toss to first. As Nunamaker forced Boone at second, Cook scored. The Red Sox went to the front in the seventh. With one out, Bill Carrigan doubled to left. After Ruth struck out, and Hooper walked, Wagner jammed a hit to left, scoring Carrigan.

The followed the giddy ninth when Dan Boone wrought havoc with Ruth's pitching. In that round, Pipp was an easy out at first and Cook was hit by a pitched ball. Cole stole second. Peck sent a high fly to Hoblitzel, and then Boone crashed his double to right centre, scoring Cook and tieing the score.

The Yankees had a splendid opportunity to win in the elefenth inning. Pipp opened the session with a single, and after two men had been retired, Ruth was fraid to take a chance with Boone, so he gave him an intentional pass, and, Nunamaker, following Daniel, hoisted a high fly to Hooper in right.

Pieh's great pitching saved the Yanks the game in the eleventh. Henriksen, pinch-hitting for Bill Carrigan, doubled and sent Scott around to third. Pieh then struck out the next two batters.

High opened the thirteenth inning with a single and stole second. After Pipp had struck out, Cook produced his timely single to right and High romped home with the game.

On Monday, a crowd of more than 8,000 sailors from the fleet will be the guests of the Yankee owners at the Polo Grounds. The score:

This Game Won in First Inning.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, May 6.—Chicago defeated Cleveland 10 to 4, scoring six runs in the first inning on three passes, three errors, and three hits, and driving Mitchell from the box. Cleveland knocked Benz out in the fifth inning, but Cicotte, his successor, was a puzzle. Walker, who relieved Mitchell, was effective, and so was Coumbe, who finished, until the ninth, when Roth's triple cleared the bases. Score:

GIANTS BUNCH HITS, BEAT BRAVES, 3 TO 1

Tesreau Wild, but Effective When He Gets Ball Over Plate—Tyler's First Game.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., May 6.—Jeff Tesreau's sore finger did not bother him much this afternoon, when he jumped the Giants into the winning column against the Braves by holding them to four scattered hits, not one of which counted toward the champions' short end of the 3 to 1 score. It was a fine day, and Jeff was well warmed up to his work, going strong for the entire route, and even when the Braves' early lead seemed good against the New Yorkers, who, try as hard as they might, could not seem to get any "breaks." Against Tesreau Stallings sent George Tyler, famous last year, but not quite up to the mark on the occasion of his first appearance on the big field this season. The Giants reached Tyler eight times, Fletcher being the only player to make more than one hti, only two of his three singles playing important parts toward the two runs which made up McGraw's winning margin.

Tesreau worked for the corners all afternoon, and was rewarded by fanning seven of the champions, although six of them drew tickets to big Schmidt's corner.

The Braves had plenty of action, and to beat them it was necessary for the Giants to head off two runners at the plate, Brainerdturning this trick on Tyler in the third inning just before Boston scored its only run, and in the seventh, Robertson'st splendid throw beating out Gilbert, who was trying to score from second on Moran's hit past Fletcher.

The Giants continued to show the fighting qualities that marked their work in their last two games against the Philadelphia leaders, and in spite of their handicaps, looked like a real ball club behind Tesreau. Boston scored the only run, which stood as tis lead up to the Giants' seventh inning, during its third batting session. Tyler was passed and then Jeff hit Moran, Egan going out by a sacrifice, Brainerd to Tesreau. Connolly also hit to Brainerd, whose throw to Meyers was a beauty, but with Moran on third the Braves pulled off the double steal for a run, Meyers throw going too low to Fletcher and the ball being dropped.

All of Boston's hits came after this and Tesreau always was safe, although plainly upset because the team behind him was not coming through with any runs. There were chances enough, but things broke decidedly wrong for New York.

In the second inning Fletcher singled only to be caught off first. In the fourth Lobert doubled to the banking after two were out, Fletcher then roiling an easy one to second base. In the fifth Burnes opened with a hit, but was forced, while in the sixth Tesreau was ticketed and then doubled up with Murray on a roller to Egan and Doyle's fine double was therefore wasted.

In the seventh, however, things got going for the Giants in earnest. Fletcher started with a hard single to right field and moved along, while Maranville was throwing Burns out at first base. Then Robertson came through with a triple to the right field corner which sent Fletcher dancing home with the tieing run. Robertson himself scored a moment later when, with the Braves' infield drawn in close, Brainerd punched a dinky hit over second base.

In the eighth the Giants got another run after Murray had struck out. Tyler hit Doyle, who was forced when Loubert hit to Egan, but Hans, however, moved when Gowdy, who had replaced Whaling, had a passed ball, and then Fletcher was on deck with another hit, a beauty, which sizzled past Maranville and on which it was an easy mater for Loubert to score. Pirates Overcome Lead and Win.

PITTSBURGH, May 6.—Overcoming a three-run lead, Pittsburgh hammered out a 9 to 3 victory over St. Louis today. The wildness of Meadows and Griner aided the locals in scoring four runs in the fifth inning, enough to win the game. The locals added one more in the sixth and four more in the eighth. Adams was hit hard at the start, but held St. Louis runless after the fourth. Score:

STANDS FOR SOUTH FIELD.

Seating Capacity for Football, However, Will Be Only 5,000.

Work was started yesterday in the erection of permanent stands on South Field in pdeparation for the Columbia football games next fall. These stands will come in useful for the remainder of the baseball season this Spring, and in particular for the annual Commencement ay game with Pennsylvania and the annual stunts on South Field. When all the stands are erected, the full capacity of South Field will be only 5,000. It seems probable that on this account, if for no other, one of the limitations of the faculty committe will have to be eliminated as it is felt that the boom of the sport on Morningside Heights will compel greater accomodations and force the Blue and White to either the Polo grounds or a new stadium such as C. C. N. Y. now has for its games.

BENNY KAUFF REPENTS.

Seeks Reinstatement to Brookfeds—Acted on Poor Advice.

Benny Kauff, the Brookfed outfielder who caused such a commotion in baseball circles last week when he jumped to the Giants and was turned back to the Feds by the National League, has written a letter of repentance to President Gilmore stating that he is sorry that he violated rules, and asking that his suspension be lifted, as he is anxious to play with the Brookfeds as soon as possible. Kauff states that the whole affair was the result of a misunderstanding, and that the trouble was caused by his following the advice of older men in the game. He further states that the Giants would even now be glad to get him if the National Commission would allow them to have him.

While Kauff seemingly is on the verge of getting out of the trouble he caused last week, he is in danger of getting into more if he plays with the All-Stars at Lenox Oval next Sunday, as has been announced by the management of the All-Stars. Kauff, according to the notices sent out, is to play left field for the Stars next Sunday, but Business Manager Dick Carroll of the Brookfeds stated yesterday that Kauff had been forbidden to play with tht team, and if he did play he would be placing a lot more trouble on his shoulders.

Kauff's letter to President Gilmore follows:

I am anxious to play ball again with the Brookfeds and feel sorry that I followed the advice of older men in the game and took part in the recent trouble. Mr. Ward has treated me fairly, and has shown so much interest in my welfare that I am ready to show the fans that I am not ungrateful. Will you please raise my suspension and let me take part in the Brookfeds' pennant fight? Manager Magee has always used me squarely and is a hustler of my own style. The whole affair of last week was the result of a misunderstanding, and I put too much confidence in what baseball veterans and advisors told me. The Brookfeds are the best combination I have ever played with, and if you will act favorably upon this application I will at all times give my best services to the club.

Theatrical men and semi-pro managers have been claiming I would be with them, but if you will raise my suspension I will be in there working for the Brookfeds on the first opportunity I get. Regarding the National Commission's ruling that I am undesirable, I want to say that John McGraw and others in organiezd ball do not think so even now. If they could have got me away the National Commission would have found a place for me O. K. Please act upon this so that I can get into the game while the strong Western clubs are at Washington Park.

TIGERS LOSE IN TWELFTH.

Crawford of Penn State Smashes Out a Double, Scoring Two Runs.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., May 6.—Penn State won a twelve-inning game from Princeton this afternoon, 3 to 1. After the scoring of the early innings, the teams were deadlocked until the twelve, when Crawford hit a double to centre field, sending two runs home.

Crawford, besides his timely hitting, was the defensive star of the day. In the ninth, with two Tigers on the bases, he picked Scully's long hit out of the air while traveling at top speed. In the twelve he made two hard catches of fly balls that checked a Princeton batting rally.

Both Link and Hessellbacher pitched excellent ball, but the Penn State twirler was a degree more effective with men on the bases. The Tigers' lone run came in the first, when Hanks reached first on a safety and Scully drove him home with a three-base hit. The score:

Yale Wins Game at Start.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 6.—By batting Pitcher Gerard for three runs in the opening inning, Yale secured a winning lead on Lafayette today and won, 5 to 2. Gerard was touched up for two more runs in the third inning, but the Elis did not hit him safely after the fourth inning. Spencer Pumpelly was found safely eight times and allowed eight passes, but the Yale fielders helped him out of repeated holes, fourteen Lafayette base runners being marooned. The rival shortstops, Legore and English, throttled several screaming bounders, and Reilly and Helfrich, the third baseman, pulled down almost impossible flies. The batting of Reilly, Legore, and Myers featured. The score:

TRIPLE PLAY STIRS BROOKFEDS' FANS

Tobin Makes Wonderful Catch, Hurls Ball to Infield, and Two Others Are Nailed.

A triple play started by Outfielder Tobin of the St. Louis Club, which was consummated by three other players, was a feature of the game played in Brooklyn yesterday, which the Brookfeds won by a score of 3 to 2. The play was so unexpected that two base runners were caught so far away from the bases they had left on a long fly to Tobin that it was a futile task they performed in trying to get back to where they had been anchored.

Quick Watson gave free passes to Evans and Myers, the first two men up in the sixth inning, and then Holt clouted the ball into deep right field. Mike Tobin at the crack of the bat turned and raced toward the brick wall, and when a few feet from it pushed his gloved hand up into the air and speared the ball. By the time Mike had brought down the long drive Evans had turned third and was dashing for the plate, and Myers was just about to turn into the home stretch. Tobin made a long throw to Johnson at short, who tossed the ball to Bridwell, doubling Evans, and the second baseman then threw to Borton, retiring Myers at first.

Don Morian allowed St. Louis one pass and three singles in the first inning, but he settled down after that session and pitched wonderful ball, no St. Louis player getting a hit during the remainder of the game, and only one man got on base on a base on balls, and he was caught attempting to steal second base. Only twenty-four batters faced Marion in the last eight innings, and the Brookfeds won, 3 to 2. The game was replete with fast, sensational fielding, but the feature was the triple play by St. Louis in the sixth inning.

St. Louis's two runs came in the first inning. Bridwell drew a pass and Tobin singled. Drake flied out to centre, but Borton singled, scoring Bridwell, and a moment later Miller drove out another single, sending Tobin across the plate. After that Marion had the St. Louis batsmen tapping out easy grounders or popping to the infield, Hartley being the only man who hit the ball to the outfield for St. Louis after the first inning, and he flied out to Evans.

Two of the Brookfeds' three runs were scored in the second inning. Hap Myers got a pass and Holt singled. Both men advanced a base when Gagnier went out, Bridwell to Borton. On this play Bridwell made a sensational stop of Gagnier's hot drive. The ball went skimming along the diamond between first and second bases and Bridwell knocked it down with one hand and recovered it in time to beat Gagnier to the bag. Land was an easy out, Bridwell to Borton, and then Watson passed Marion, loading the bases. Anderson came through with a scratch hit to first base, scoring Myers and Holt. Delehanty struck out, retiring the side.

Brooklyn added another run in the eighth and won the game. Delehanty walked, but was forced at second by Cooper. He went to second when Evans grounded out, Bridwell to Borton, and took third when Hartley let the ball get past at the plate. Hap Myers then stung the ball along the third base line and Cooper romped home with the run that won. Hap, incidentally, stole second base and was the only man who was able to get away with a pilfer. Four Homers at Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, Md., May 6. — Baltimore made a clean sweep of the series with Chicago by taking today's game 9 to 8. With Chicago four runs to the good in the sixth inning, Prendergast went into the box for the visitors. A double, a pass, and a single by Zinn, pinch hitting for Bender, netted Baltimore a run. Then Simmons, another pinch hitter, hit over the fence, sending in two runs ahead of him. Zinn broke the tie and won the game with a hit over the fence in the eighth inning. Walsh of Baltimore and Mann of Chicago also hit over the fence for home runs. Score:

Changes on Fordham Nine.

Dissatisfied by the showing made by Fordham's baseball nine against Holy Cross last Wednesday, when for the first time a Maroon baseball team was downed on its own diamond by a nine from Worcester, Coach Warner made several radical changes in the Bronx line-up yesterday. Conway, who caught in every game this season, but who has been crippled by a torn ligament in the knee, has been shifted to first base. He is succeeded behind the bat by Viviano, who comes in from right field. Viviano is no stranger at backstop as he was regular catcher two seasons ago. Kellihar, who is an accurate thrower from the outfield, has been moved from first base to right field. It is also likely that Shankey will supersede Kiernan at second base.

TO SWIM AT PHILADELPHIA.

New York Women to Compete Against Quakers May 15.

Arrangements have been completed for the first intercity swimming meet between women since they were permitted to bbcome registered with the Amateur Athletic Union. A team from the National Women's Life Saving League will go to Philadelphia on May 15 to compete against the representatives of the Philadelphia Turngemeinde in the latter's pool. The following list of events will be contested: 160-yard relay for teams of four, 100-yard swim, 40-yard swim, plunge for distance, and rancy diving.

For the New York organization the following members are practicing, and nine will make the trip to Philadelphia: Misses Rita Greenfield, May Nerich, Charlotte Epstein, Millie Barteldis, Martha Hagstadt, Edna Cole, Elsie Sultan, Lucy Freeman, and Sophie Freitag, for the swimming, and May Waldis and Josephine Bartlett, for the diving.

The following members of theh Philadelphia organization will represent their organization: Misses Olga Dorfner, Agnes Hueber, Edna Dorfner, Margaret Majer, Alma Heckert, Emma Paessler, Elizabeth Becker, and Helen Pennypacker.

Robertson Intercollegiate Starter.

"Sparrow" Robertson is to succeed Sam See of this city as tarter of the annual intercollegiate track and field championships to be held this year at Franklin Field, Philadelphia, May 28 and 29, according to gossip in college athletic circles. According to the report Robertson was selected at a recent meeting of the Advisory Board of the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America. See has been starting intercollegiate championships for twenty years.

"The Sparrow" has been engaged as starter of most of the imprtant college meets this season. Saturday he will officiate at the Princeton-Yale dual meet and the following Saturday he will be starter of the games between Yale and Harvard. Next month Robertson will go to Chicago to start the annual track meet of the Western conference, which will be held on the field of the University of Illinois. The sports take place on June 4 and 5. Robertson attracted much attention from Westerners by his superb work at the conference meet last year, and his selection this Spring was the result.

Momument Writes from Trenches.

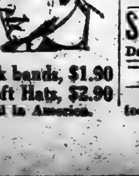
Fighting the Germans from the trenches in France is a more exciting "sport" than winning mile races, so Jack Monument, the old Irish-American A. C. athlete told Johnny McHugh of the Public Schools Athletic League in a letter received by him yesterday. The letter was written from "Somewhr in Franc," but presumably from a place where the fighting is best, for Monument is a trooper with the "Fourth Dragoon Guards, Squadron A, British Expeditionary Force in France," which has seen much active service. There are only a few words, hastily written on a page torn from one of Dieges & Clust's diaries of 1912. Monument said, "Will be seeing you as soon as the war is over, if I am still alive."

Funke Trapshooting Winner.

Nineteen men took part in the special 100-"bird" handicap shooting match at the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club's traps yesterday under ideal conditions. H. F. L. Funke and Tracey H. Lewis tied for the principal prize, with 100 "birds" each, and in the shoot-off Funke won. Lewis took the second prize, and L. V. Smull, with 99 as his score, won the third prize. H. L. Hoyt, Jr., tied him, but as he was scratch man the committee gave him the prize for high (scratch) gun. The prize for professionals went to C. F. Winslow.

Elimination Trials for Big Race.

The elimination trials for the Indianapolis 500-mile auto race will be held on May 20, 21 and 22, and the present entry of forty-one cars will be cut to thirty-three, meaning that eight will be eliminated at the trials. The car making the fastest time in the trials will be given position No. 1 in the race, next the pole, and the other positions will be assigned according to the best times made in the trials by the other cars. Frank Galvin, a former six-day bike rider, and George Babcock, the New England racing phenom, have been selected with Dario Resta to complete the Peugeot team for the race, and these men will start practicing on the track in a few days.



QUAKERS CLIMB AT DODGERS' EXPENSE

Pat Moran's boys got the Quaker City pennant special back on the rails again yesterday afternoon at Ebbets Field, and buffeted the Dodgers out of their path like chaff. The Philadelphians came into the city with a whoop, and started right in to show that those stories that they were side-tracked were all a myth. Robbie's team had been looking forward to greeting a lot of backsliders who wouldn't have enough energy to punish the leather if it was tossed over by an infant. The guess was about as bad as a weather prediction, and after nine innings of futile effort the Dodgers were counted out by a score of 3 to 1.

A couple of three-baggers in a sprinkling of seven hits, and two errors, were the deciding factors. It was Erskine Mayer who tossed the sphere over for the Quaker City men, and he did it so effectively that the Dodger batsmen could connect with only five safeties, and two of these came in the eighth inning, bringing in the sole tally for the Ebbets contingent. At all other times he held effectively in check the aspirations of the Brooklyn team.

Until the eighth inning even the most dyed-in-the-wool Brooklyn fan would have passed up the Dodgers for a two-cent piece. When McCarty, the first man up, bumped the ball on the nose for three bases they eradicated their despondent mood and looked as chirp as a bunch of kids. Even when Ed Pfeffer waved his bat wildly in the air without even a near approach to touching the ball they refused to be discouraged. That was only one out, and nobody had expected much better of Ed even though he had made one single.

When O'Mara stepped up and met one of Mayer's slants for a double to right centre there was the first real hearty cheer, for McCarty crossed the plate with a Dodger tally.

"Now they're off," shouted one hopeful. And right at this point is where Daubert and Stengel lost a great big basketful of Brooklyn admiration. The first named lifted a long fly that literally fell into Becker's hands. He didn't have to make a move. Then came Mr. Stengel, the most successful kil joy of all. He tapped one to Nichoff that brought the easiest sort of an out.

In the next inning Wheat tried his best to start something and shot one at Mayer that nine times out of ten would have been good for a sack. It was above the pitcher's head, but he shot up his gloved hand and speared the liner. The side went out easily after that discouragement.

Three double plays were put over by the Brooklyn team and one was a beauty. It came in the seventh and cut short the Quakers' ambitions with only one run. Stock lifted a long fly to Wheat, and Killifer, who was on third, starte dto come in, but Wheat's throw was too speedy and the runner was caught between the bases.

The first Philadelphia run came in the fourth inning. Becker dropped one over short for a base and Cravath walked. Pfeffer was getting a bit too anxious and he went wild, hitting Whitted. Nichoff shot one to O'Mara, which gave Brooklyn a chance to pull a double play, but Becker came to the plate. Paskert went out on an infield tap. In the eighth inning Paskert's three-bagger started trouble after Nichoff had been an easy out. Killifer walked and Cutshaw's fumble of Mayer's hit let Paskert score. Paskert and Killifer, with the latter at bat, tried to work the squeeze play, but it was a failure. If it had not been for McCarty's error Paskert would have been put. He was caught off the sack and with a chance to run him down between the bases, McCarty threw badly and hit the runner so that he was able to get back to third.

The final Brooklyn tally was the result of another three-bagger, this time by Becker. He zipped one to right and scored on Craavth's single to left. Whitted singled, but tried to stretch the hit and was caught. The score:

I. A. A. A. A. Games Next Winter.

Although the first indoor games of the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America, held here last Winter, were not highly successful, they will be held again next year, and the association has already secured an option on Madison Square Garden for the first Saturday in March. The committee in charge of these games confered with the Garden management early this week and were assigned the date they desired. Romeyn Berry of the Cornell University Club of New York, who was one of the leaders in the management of this year's meet, will continue in the directing of the sports and he promises a list of events that is bound to attract widespread interest. There will be a number of contests different from these of this year added to the program, and in fact, a general revision of the list will be made. The same policy of team competition will be continued, it is believed, and the games will not be called championships.

NEW YORK, FRIDAY, MAY 7, 1915.

PLENTY OF WHEAT.

A wheat famine is one of the calamities that is not expected to happen. The present condition of Winter wheat in this country is excellent and the acreage is the largest ever sown. It is about 14 per cent. greater than last season's acreage, from which the yield was a new crop record. Therefore the reasonable probability is that there will be a large American surplus, which, added to 76,000,000 bushels available from India and 100,000,000 from Argentina, ought to make good the European deficiency for another year, if that shall prove to be necessary.

More convincing, perhaps, than anything of what has been said is the fact that on the grain exchanges May wheat sells 40 cents a bushel higher than the September option, whereas a year ago at this time, with an enormous Winter wheat crop in prospect, May wheat sold only 10 cents above the September option. On the September options wheat from the new crop will be in active delivery. Obviously the grain dealers expect wheat to fall between now and September, and for one or more of three reasons, namely (1) the prospect of a very large wheat production in the meantime, (2) the possibility that the Allies will force the Dardanelles and gain access to the more or less imaginary store of Russian wheat, and (3) the constant liability of peace. The first reason has been discussed. The second is perhaps rated beyond its importance. The Russian crop last year was short. The exportable surplus, therefore, is small, and the Government in any event would be likely to place an embargo upon shipments of food grain from the country. The third reason is the one that contains dramatic, not to say theatrical, possibilities for the grain trade. Every one knows, or at least believes, that peace coming suddenly would cause a violent fall in the price of wheat, and possibly one-half of the difference between the price of May wheat and the September option represents the grain market's precaution against that contingency. At all events, the shrewd grain trader's opinion, made up in several ways, is that there will be wheat enough in the world, and that the price is more likely to stay where it is or to fall than to go any higher, at least for a while.

THE BATTLE OF YPRES.

The result of the battle of Ypres hangs in the balance, but be that result what it may, it is a dating point for the British Empire. It may almost be said to be the rebirth of the empire, sharing the distinction with the battle on the Gallipoli peninsula. There first colonial blood has been shed for the empire's foreign wars in quantities sufficient to make history. Six thousand of Canada's best offered their lives for the empire's political policy around Hill No. 60. The list of dead has not yet been published for the Dardanelles attack, but the Australian and New Zealand colonies have received first news that they must face a calamity like Canada's. This is something different from the sending of forces to fight the Boers in South Africa, or even to defend the Suez Canal. Those are domestic concerns, and self-interest would impel the support of family institutions and property. But when colonials die by battalions, and on matters of foreign politics, the colonies assert their maturity.

The acceptance of such services is an implied promise to reward them in the only way possible. The colonials are not mercenaries. No monetary reward is to be considered. It is necessary that they should receive what hitherto has been jealously withheld—a place in the council of the empire. It may be taken as sure that the colonials will be consulted in the peace discussions, and hereafter there will be no war without consultation with afterward to be funded. Great Britain met her own and a considerable proportion of her allies' expenditures by borrowing. In 1793, before the beginning of the war with France, the British national debt was £244,000,000; after the battle of Waterloo it was £826,000,000, an increase of £582,000,000 ($2,910,000,000,) or about 240 per cent. in a little more than twenty years. That is in strong contrast with an increase of more than 100 per cent. in one year of modern war. During the Napoleonic wars, as now, Great Britain assumed the giant's share of the financial burden. She was merchant, manufacturer and subsidizer for all the rest of Europe. The compensation was that her trade and manufactures greatly increased, owing to her superior facilities for producing and supplying the munitions of war to the enemies of France, as well as to her higher financial sagacity.

There was at that time no great non-European neutral like the United States to supply the wants of combatants. The fact that supplies are obtainable outside of Europe in immense quantities at the present time helps to make the fighting faster and more costly than was the case a century ago. Obviously, if the belligerents were thrown wholly upon their own resources they could not spend money so fast, or prosecute war on so vast a scale. And the rapidity with which destructive events take place under modern conditions will limit or modify the compensations that might otherwise be expected to accrue to Great Britain as the subsidizer of all anti-German Europe. During the Napoleonic wars trade had time in which to adjust itself to special opportunities, and so to get the full benefit of them. That is not now the case. The opportunities are sudden, volcanic, and will not wait. If British manufacturers cannot supply goods fast enough, the orders are sent abroad. And perhaps before trade anywhere can rationally adapt itself to the requirements of war the war will be over, having exceeded the ability of the people to provide, as rapidly as they are required, the means with which to continue it.

THE FEDERAL CLEARING HOUSE.

The banks of this Federal Reserve district are to give their replies on the 15th of this month to the proposal for the establishment of the Federal clearing system. In other districts similar proposals are in various stages of maturity. That is what the Federal Reserve Board referred to when it postponed further alterations in reserve district boundaries until the effects of intradistrict and interdistrict clearings develop.

Heretofore the New York Clearing House has been something more than an organization for swapping debits and credits on the spot instead of collecting them over the counter by messengers. Hereafter the New York Clearing House will be something less by the loss of the old representative position which it held when it alone spoke for united New York's financial interests. It is a distinct loss, and in some degree was inevitable. The old position of primacy among all American financial institutions might have survived as long as the national banking system, but it was doomed to go whenever this financial centre found a leader like the Bank of England. The London Clearing House is an important institution, but it never enjoyed the prestige of our Clearing House. It simply cleared, and did not aspire to functions of leadership. Those were resigned to the Bank of England, which is the bank of banks for Britain, and has been for the world, in some degree. It is to be hoped that our Federal Reserve Bank will come to like power and dignity.

THE MURDER MYSTERIES.

It is perfectly natural that there should be great excitement and apprehension in that east side neighborhood where the "ripper" has lately slaughtered two little children. A monster may be at large near the scene of the crimes, and the police are seemingly powerless to identify him or to obtain a clue to his identity. The testimony of medical experts that a creature capable of such atrocities might be a man of normal aspect, of generally good behavior, tends to increase the horror of the situation. The "ripper" murders unfortunately are only two of the recent murder mysteries which have perturbed New York. Within less than six months twenty murders have been committed in the city by persons still at large. HANEL, who killed JULIA HEILNER, seems to have slipped through the hands of the police. There are no charges of heedlessness against the department, but in spite of its recent general efficiency it is obviously unable to meet the present dangerous situation.

It is barely conceivable that the east side "ripper" may never be identified. The infamous "Jack the Ripper" of London was never caught. But this man has friends or acquaintances, he must have excited the suspicion of more than one person, and it seems that a competent detective system might put the officers on his trail. We cannot continue our existence comfortably when murders are committed at the rate of three or four a week and a large proportion of the murderers remain at large. The excitement will presently spread all over the city. We can understand that the Police Department feels that hostile criticism of its methods in such a crisis is neither helpful nor generous. The to be sure, but their responsibility for the detection of criminals cannot, be denied, and it seems that more rigorous measures should be taken without delay to prevent the easy escape of dangerous criminals.

EDISON.

The tribute paid to THOMAS ALVA EDISON at the meeting of the Civic Forum in Carnegie Hall last night was not a unique incident in the career of our illustrious inventor. EDISON has been for many years a prophet not without honor in his own land. His contributions to the development of industrial civilization have all been too important to escape the notice of his contemporaries, and his commanding genius has been appropriately recognized many times and in many places. Not only as an inventor, but as the perfector of the inventions of others, Mr. EDISON has been of great service to his country and to the world. Besides his improvements in the means of telegraphic communication, the incandescent lamp, the phonograph in all its forms, and the kinetoscope, which made the moving picture possible, are directly due to his wonderful skill as an originator or adapter.

Therefore the Civic Forum and its distinguished speakers in honoring EDISON paid honor also to their country. For EDISON is fairly typical of the best there is in this country in energy, invention, intellectual alertness, and business capacity. At the close of his seventh decade he is happily still in the prime of life, his faculties were never more alert, and his good work for his fellow-men is not yet finished.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Street Car Bundles Considered.

Few more difficult and embarrassing problems could have been brought before the Public Service Commission than that of deciding just what and how much, besides themselves, people shall be allowed to carry into our various kinds of street cars.

On the one hand, it would be the infliction of a general hardship and a serious disarrangement of universal and immemorial custom if everything in the nature of parcels and what is called hand baggage were excluded from public vehicles. Even such a docile population as ours would certainly revolt against such a regulation as that, and, if necessary, would fight for what it considers an ancient right.

On the other hand, there is a tendency on the part of many persons, from motives of industrial or commercial economy, to expect, demand, and, if permitted, to take, in return for their nickels, the transportation of freight more or less "heavy," and not infrequently in forms that are troublesome, dangerous, or offensive to a majority of the other passengers.

Somewhere between those extremes is the golden mean of compromise between nothing and anything, but where that line should be drawn is a question to which answers widely different and disquietingly vehement are sure to be given. The poor but honest workman will resent the banishment of the honorable tools of his honorable trade, and yet these, on account of their angular shapes and sharp or serrated edges, not to speak of their occasional uncleanliness, are about the worst nuisances that can be brought into a street car. Bothersome, too, are assorted tradesmen doing business in a small way, and unable or unwilling to maintain delivery wagons of their own. They contribute many large and ungainly bundles to the bumping and bruising of a crowded public, but they would utter short, sharp barks painfully audible to listening politicians if their accustomed privileges were abolished or even abridged.

So easily, therefore, can this particular—and really needed—reform be interpreted into an attack on "the poor" that any restrictive determination as to the permissible size of parcels in street cars is sure to excite a lot of resentment, and, unfortunately for the Commission, the resentment will not be without some excuse.

A Proposal Worthy of Attention.

From Chicago, where the wind blows and whence not a little of it comes, there arrives the interesting announcement that the Merchant Tailors' Association of the city has by formal resolution urged its Aldermen to wear evening clothes when they hold their sessions in the evening, as they usually or often do.

Superficial thinkers and hasty deciders will be apt to see in this device only an attempt by tailors for once to lighten their wonted solemnity by a gleam of humor. It doesn't take long to wait a minute, however, and he who thus judiciously delays the expression of his opinion will probably say, after that period of deliberation, that the tailors' word, like many another spoken in jest, is true—that it would be a good thing if the Aldermen of Chicago and elsewhere should heed the proffered advice.

Clothes do not make the man, of course, but it is of common knowledge and experience that they influence him in manner much and in conduct to an easily measurable degree. Aldermen in evening clothes would feel a certain compulsion or impulsion to live up to them, just as the possessors of old blue china are guided by it toward dignity and propriety.

Possibly there are Aldermen—in Chicago—who are as yet not very well informed as to what constitutes correctness in after-dark habilimentation, but they could all learn, as they have all learned many more difficult things than what shoes go with what coats and what ties with what shirts. Judges are not afraid to admit that robes increase the respect felt for learning, and Aldermen can well afford to confess a debt to the orthodox spiketail or clawhammer. Also they would better mind their P's and Q's, and other letters worthy of attention, when dressed in clothes long associated with courtesy and refinement.

This Name Has a Meaning.

Yesterday, as on not a few previous occasions, the dispatches from Rome and the from Chiasso, just across the border in Switzerland, directly contradicted each other as to the probability that Italy would take an immediate part in the war. That from the Italian capital, where, of course, it had been subjected to the strict censorship which began on March 22, declared on the authority of the well-known English correspondent, Dr. DILLON, that no understanding with Austria could possibly be reached, and that by May 12 Italy, as the only way to get the

THE GIANT'S SHARE.

The Chancellor of the British Exchequer estimates that to defray the cost of twelve months of war, besides spending all available revenue, Great Britain will have to borrow the capital sum of $4,300,000,000. That does not include loans to her allies, all of whom she is assisting financially. It is but the sum in which Great Britain's direct share in the cost of one year's war will exceed the Government's current income. It will have to be added to the national debt, which will be more than doubled. At the beginning of the war the British funded debt was approximately $4,000,000,000. At the end of the year's fighting it will be, according to Mr. LLOYD GEORGE'S estimate, $8,300,000,000.

The raising of this enormous sum will represent very largely the process of a people borrowing from themselves. Those who have saved capital, or those who do save it, lend to all the rest—that is, to the Government—on promise of repayment with interest. Therefore, neither the increase of the national debt nor the rate of its increase can be said to prove that the war is being fought on the credit of posterity. The English people may be saving capital even now at that rate, prodigious as it seems, or they may be saving a very large proportion of it, and drawing upon their principal, meaning by that their past savings, for the remainder. But it does mean that the British public is under a tremendous strain, of which there is no really comparable experience in economic history, and that it cannot continue for very long without impairing their ability to find capital in the future for works of peace. That is true, in some degree, of course, of all the belligerents. The rapidity with which the war is using up capital could hardly have been foreseen. The thing is without parallel.

Great Britain now is carrying the financial load just as she did a century ago. Europe then was fighting France as it is fighting Germany today. The analogies are very remarkable. France, under NAPOLEON, knew how to make war support war, at least in a considerable measure, and laid conquered territory under contribution. Austria, Russia, Spain, Denmark and other countries made large issues of paper currency, all of MEXICAN PLOTTING.

Coincident with the publication of a new series of revelations of the crimes and cruelties practiced in Mexico since the beginning of the Madero régime, accompanied, of course, by violent denunciation of President WILSON'S policy, is the seeming preparation on American soil, and presumably with the co-operation of Americans, for a counter-revolution which is to overthrow the forces of all the contending leaders in the stricken republic and re-establish a Government similar in character to that which MADERO overthrew. Americans can have no quarrel with Mexicans about any Government they choose to set up, but it seems that the kind of rule with which PORFIRIO DIAZ managed to keep up a factitious peace for thirty years will not suffice for any country now, and whatever this counter-revolution might accomplish, we are quite confident that another revolution would soon ensue. Complicity of Americans in any warlike movement against any person or party in the country south of our border lacks proof, of course. Such complicity is only a matter of conjecture, though more or less vague indications of its existence are observable. The organization of foreign military movements on our soil, however, should cause general resentment.

Doubtless our Government does not lack information of the plans of the various conservative juntas in this city and elsewhere. That General HUERTA should be associated in the public mind with such a movement is inevitable. He has no reason to feel at home in any part of the United States, but he has been living in this city and receiving deputations of exiled Mexican statesmen and soldiers. PASQUALE OROZCO is here, and some of HUERTA'S other lieutenants in the day of his glory. HUERTA may be going to settle in Forest Hills, as his agents say, and play golf on the public links in the park all the rest of his life. He will be welcome if he remains peaceful and lawabiding. But if he is only here to plan an invasion of Mexico, to put either himself or ITURBIDE or another in power as Dictator, the sooner he gets on Mexican soil with all his dear old friends the better it will be for us, and for him and his associates, too.

THE ANCIENT FEUD.

Dramatic Criticism Has Come a Long and Parlous Way.

From the Outlook.

The critic in every generation has come in for his share of criticism. Richard Brinsley Sheridan, in his comedy "The Critic," aimed some biting satire at those who write of plays. In "Fanny's First Play" George Bernard Shaw, himself once a critic, pokes considerable fun—and very good fun—at the members of the critical craft. He has one character in the play say of a critic, "Quite human. I was surprised." And in another place he has a character refer to a critic as a person who "is helped out positively by a slight turn for writing, and negatively by a comfortable ignorance and lack of intuition which hide from him all the dangers and disgraces that keep men of finer perception in check."

All of which is apropos of the agitation newly reopened by one play-producing firm in New York against dramatic critics. A number of commentators would seem to be of the impression that such opposition to unfavorable criticism of plays is a product of this time and has an unhealthy significance. A half-century ago, Taine, referring to criticism, wrote: "This trade of calumny was in vogue fifty years ago; in fifty more it will probably have altogether ceased." But within the last decade so distinguished a critic as William Winter has had to give way before the opposition of theatrical producers to his reviews of their plays. Such capable writers as Alan Dale, Samuel Hoffenstein, and Acton Davies fought against the opposition made by play-producers. Walter Prichard Eaton, a magazine writer of note, recently has been excluded from a New York theatre; and now Alexander Woollcott, the critic for THE NEW YORK TIMES, has had to appeal to the Supreme Court for permission to attend the performance at a theatre from which he had been barred by the management because of an unfavorable review written by him of a play the same managers had produced.

What makes this case of unusual interest is that THE TIMES has backed up its play reviewer by invoking the aid of the Supreme Court, and that the theatrical producers in question inserted an advertisement in several New York newspapers appealing to the public not to believe anything they read in the reviews of a play produced by them. This announcement had to do with a certain play which they feared the critics might misinterpret.

The fact of the matter is that the play in question is a stupid, inutile English version of a German farce that might better have been left unwritten. It lacks all the elements that would commend it to theatre-goers.

Children Should Go to Bed.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have never seen attention called to the fact that the children of the poor have from infancy no regular bedtime. Your paper today gives an account of the terrible murder of a little 4-year-old boy who, with a boy of 5, had been playing outdoors at 7:30 in the evening. The 4-year-olds I know are in bed by 6:30. Often a toddler of 3 and his baby brother play in my hot, brightly lighted kitchen at 10 o'clock at night. With a half-mile walk before them, these children can scarcely be in bed before 11, and the experience is not an uncommon one for them, nor for thousands like them.

Why, then, should we wonder if boys and girls of 14 roam the streets at midnight, learning all manner of evil? M.

"THE WAR BABY."

Why was I called from out the voids of space
Along a starless way, without a trace
That sanctifies the coming of God's own?
For desolate I came
And find dim shame to mother me,
Paternity (like me) without a name;
An unknown grave, beside an unknown sea
Is all that fathers me.
Robbed of my birthright by a blinded Fate
To sate
The dull cupidity, the insatiate
World-greed of nations.

The red libations of the long-ago
To heathen gods and elements do show
More of humanity—are shorn
Of present-day atrocity and woe;
Once and for all their sacrifice was made;
The palpitating, bleeding heart was torn
And paid the toll for Present and for Past.
All that and more we pay, with our Today,
In levying tribute from the hosts unborn.

Brought from the void by desecration's call,
To fail on desolation emptier still,
No joy, no will did Fate instill
Within the hurried fabric of my loom,
My doom
To come unloved, unwelcomed,
Branded with sorrow to the inner core
Of my life's marrow. Horror and its toll
Have seared my soul.
White hate unbridled flamed.
The burden of the slain was ruthless lain
On me, Life's derelict.
In vain, defamed,
And helpless hands they place
The torches of a race
Inflamed with passion and self-centred end.
May Heaven itself forefend
Destruction's sowing
Where no man may save
The joyless harvest of a nameless grave.

Why Do the Germans, Who Have Good Arguments, Invent Bad Ones?

Washington University, May 3, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

My attention has been called by representatives of the press to an article about to appear in the next issue of the Fatherland which is to state that I possess positive knowledge of an existing understanding between the Allies and the United States against Germany, and that I derived my information from Charles W. Eliot, who received it from Theodore Roosevelt. If it were not so obviously to the interest of certain groups in this country to embarrass the Administration at Washington, and if they had not chosen to do so by making the most of the "assistance" which Americans are giving the Allies by the sale of provisions and munitions of war, this statement would be too absurd to notice; but under the circumstances I am anxious to state most emphatically that it in no respect accords with fact. I do not know of a present existing understanding between the Allies and the United States hostile to Germany; I have never talked with Dr. Eliot or heard him talk even on the general subject of international politics, either in public or in private.

I did make in "Pan-Germanism" and "Pan-Americanism" the statement that before the Spanish-American War there was an understanding between the United States and England, and probably France, relating to the situation as it then existed. Everything written in that chapter was meant to apply to the situation from 1897 to 1900.

It seems to me a pity, when there are so many cogent arguments on the German side, when there is so much easily supported by precedent and logic, that the German defenders should persist in raising issues so readily turned against them, and which rouse so surely imputations of bad faith and intentional deception. The only facts behind this tale are these. I made in a book published in 1913 the statement referred to, but explicitly applied it to conditions nearly twenty years ago; as a Harvard graduate, it was assumed I knew Dr. Eliot and had talked with him; clearly Dr. Eliot had talked with President Roosevelt, who ought to know the truth; therefore, I derived my information from these gentlemen. Now, it would seem to me that if the gentlemen who are responsible for this logic had exercised the slightest care they would have assured themselves that I knew President Eliot well enough for him to impart to me international secrets and had been with him at least once in a private conference for a long enough time for him to have told me this fact. Any one of his friends or mine could have informed them that Dr. Eliot had with me only that remote acquaintanceship which he has with nearly every Harvard graduate, and that our relations had never been close enough for him to have dreamed of imparting secrets to me. Indeed, I have never talked to him for more than a minute or two, or except in the presence of numerous people.

It seems to me that the fact to stress is the extremely slender foundation for a tale which is to demonstrate to the American people their national duplicity and our share in the infamy, if I may be pardoned for coupling my name with that of Dr. Eliot. How can the German defenders expect such a tale to be credited? How can they risk making such statements? Do they not see that the ultimate effect must redound to their own greater discredit, that many will charge them with intentional deceit? Besides, my statement in "Pan-Germanism" must be so obviously stretched to cover the case that the absurdity should be clear to the veriest tyro. Even if Dr. Eliot had told me that, it would not prove a present understanding of the United States and the Allies.

Protestant Presbyterianism.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The communication of Frederick J. Pohl in your issue of today, relative to the attitude of "the protestants" of the Presbyterian General Assembly (I wonder if he does not mean the New York Presbytery?) toward the Union Seminary candidates for the ministry is interesting. He asks if they know that in maintaining that attitude they are "insulting the intelligence of Columbia University men." Frankly, I don't believe they do. I strongly suspect that, in considering the weighty matters of business which come before them, this particular item has never occurred to them. And, further, now that the matter has thus been called to their attention, I am inclined to the belief that they will go right on protesting against admitting to the Presbyterian ministry those who do not accept the fundamental doctrines upon which the denomination is founded.

The right of these "thinking young men" to entertain any views on any subject whatsoever has never been questioned. It is when the beliefs thus cherished render them persona non grata to the denomination whose ministry they seek to enter that their right to such admission is not only questioned, but vigorously and persistently and, as I believe, wisely opposed.

Silence Concerning Lithuania.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is a very curious thing that your military expert, Walter E. Ives, avoids mentioning the real name of the country now invaded by the Germans in Northwestern Russia. The fact is that from Rosieny to Shavli - Ponievies - Dinaburg—all this way stretches the line which separates the Baltic provinces from Lithuania, comprising provinces Kovno, Vilna, Suvalki, and Grodno and rivers Dubisa, Niemen, Nevieza, Vilia, Musha, and Laivene. All these are in Lithuania proper and not related to Courland in any way, as Mr. Ives would tell us.

For political reasons—and, moreover, for militaristic reasons—Russia has informed the agents of the press that, taking Ossovets as a point, it is a German campaign in "Northern Poland." No such a thing! Suvalki, Kovno, Grodno, and Vilna, four great provinces, belong to Lithuania proper, having different language, literature, and institutions, and striving for ages to regain political independence, or at least autonomous government, with a Parliament in the ancient capital, Vilna. The Friendless Sinking Fund.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Admitting that the serial-payment plan is not a "money-saving device," like a patented gas burner or a new leaching process, its real advantages over the sinking fund are still enormous. From a common-sense standpoint, the sinking-fund idea is intrinsically unsound. If you can pay part of your debts, why intrust the money to a third medium which shall eventually discharge your obligations? The sinking fund is a financial middleman; and if we may not have to pay him a profit, at least we must surely defray his expenses. The dangers of complexity, confusion, and maladministration attendant on sinking funds have been sufficiently emphasized to be familiar to every one. The serial plan is not a get-rich-quick scheme for saving millions without effort or sacrifice, but it is a direct and sensible method of discharging municipal obligations.

In South Manchuria, Besides, Her People Have Been Unable to Compete Successfully with Cheap Chinese Labor.

BY CHUGO OHIRA.

New York, May 4, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am not well informed as to the precise lines along which Japan is pursuing her demands with regard to Japanese emigration to South Manchuria. The negotiations are still in progress at Peking. This much, however, is true—it is no new policy, but was admitted as reasonable by the world at large when the late Marquis Komura, then Minister for Foreign Affairs, declared in his address to the Diet the Governmental policy for relieving the overcrowding at home by free immigration into South Manchuria and Korea, with the general approval of Japanese statesmen and people. Were this policy successfully carried out, the benefits to Japan would be immeasurable in the progress of industry and commerce, as well as in relieving the surplus population, which is such a serious problem for the Government, since the right of free immigration is denied almost the world over to the Japanese, excepting in the Far East, where they share equal privileges with Western peoples.

Although it is generally believed that the Japanese enjoy special privileges in Manchuria and have constituted a colony there, the actual conditions are decidedly otherwise. Why are the actual conditions of the Japanese in Manchuria so different from what they are thought to be?

1. In South Manchuria under the present conditions there is no room for the Japanese laborer; there is, however, opportunity for capital and the skilled laborer. The Japanese cannot compete with the Chinese laborer, as may clearly be seen from the following statistics, compiled by the South Manchurian Railway Company in 1913:

	Factory.	Harbor.	Mining.
Working hours, Japanese.	10.3	10.8	10.8
Wages per day, Japanese.	$0.68	$0.53	$0.56
Working hours, Chinese.	11	11	11
Wages per day, Chinese.	$0.25	$0.23	$0.18

2. There are no prospects for Japanese retailers, who are gradually pushed aside by Chinese, whose lower cost of living as well as keener sense in calculation enables them to outdo the Japanese in this line. For instance, in the streets about the locomotive works at Shakako of the South Manchurian Railway there are no Japanese retailers, despite the fact that residing there are 2,500 Japanese whose everyday needs are supplied by Chinese retailers.

3. Under these circumstances the only way open for Japanese immigrants is farming, but unfortunately this is not practicable in the present state of affairs, for, as a matter of fact, the only territories in Manchuria which serve Japan's colonization purposes are the Kwangtung Peninsula and the land belonging to the South Manchurian Railway Company.

Kwangtung Province, including the adjoining islands, covers only 1,303 square miles, of which but 299 square miles (23 per cent.) are available for farming, and in this small area there are 324,900 Chinese already working the land. This leaves no room for Japanese farmers. The land owned by the South Manchurian Railway outside this province, while it extends to a length of 680 miles, covers in all but 70 square miles. The major portion of this is utilized by the railway for streets, &c., therefore no large area can be leased out for farming purposes.

	Kwangtung Province.	Outside of Kwangtung.	Jap. Under jurisdiction of Consulate.	Total.
Farmers	44	127	11	182
Number of people in their families	120	190	25	344
Stock farmers	1	1	5	7
Total	172	321	101	533

This negligible number of farmer immigrants is as nothing compared with the 34,711 Japanese (86,025, including the members of their families,) engaged in sundry occupations. This condition is entirely due to the fact that there is no land available for cultivation by them in the territory where Japanese have special interests.

Since there is no room for Japanese farmers in the region under Japan's influence, she will have to seek other fields for the purpose. The ways open are, to extend the dependencies of the South Manchurian Railway or secure the right for Japanese to own land for farming purposes in South Manchuria. The former, I believe, Japan would not care to ask, as it would in reality be little short of territorial expansion and would violate in spirit the two well-known principles regarding China. The latter under present conditions is not feasible. Although I do not know of the existence of any anti-alien land law in the Chinese Code, foreigners are not allowed to own land in South Manchuria. The only way open to Japanese farmers is in the interior of South Manchuria is to lease the farm land. But even this is not without hindrance, the lease to foreigners being granted only upon the indorsement of the Chinese authorities, who usually oppose it, either directly or indirectly. And even when the right to lease land is granted, it does not help very much in relieving the surplus Japanese population, since the lease is never granted for more than one year.

No wonder, then, that not the slightest result has been attained toward the solution of the most serious problem Japan has ever had to face—the relief of overcrowding at home. As a matter of fact, farming in Manchuria is still in its infancy. Although at present the soya bean and millet are practically the only products in Manchuria, according to the careful investigation of experts, the soil is susceptible of producing other useful products if the cultivation is properly conducted.

Should South Manchuria be developed by Japanese farmers, employing all their skill; scientifically attained, for the best use of the soil, the result would be greatly to the benefit of China and Japan, as well as other powers interested in trade in China, which has been the case in Korea since the Japanese occupation. Unless the Japanese are able to acquire freedom of residence and the right to own land, this cannot be accomplished. CHUGO OHIRA.

DIRECT BOND SALES.

Besides What Might Be Saved There Is a Social Service.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Referring to the letter of Lawrence Chamberlain, representing the Investment Bankers' Association of America, published in your issue of April 15, commenting upon an article which appeared in THE TIMES of March 28, in which I outlined a plan for the city to establish offices of deposit and sell its securities direct to the citizens, I would like to make a few further remarks in reply to Mr. Chamberlain's letter.

The city sells an average of about $400,000,000 of its bonds and warrants yearly. To show what a small commission or difference in price in the disposition of these securities amounts to, I would point out that a commission or difference in price of ¼ per cent. would amount to $1,000,000, while a commission or difference in price of 1 per cent. would amount to $4,000,000. Now, if the city can save such large sums, which would otherwise go as commissions or profits to middlemen, why should it not do so? If the city trades directly with its citizens, the city and the citizens together get the entire benefit, and it is only a question of how much of the profits go to the citizens and how much to the city. Could not all these middlemen be eliminated by the city acting as a depository for the savings of the people? The city would thus have at its disposal large amounts of funds which could be invested in the securities that it issues that year, and it could be provided that this should be the sole kind of security in which the funds could be invested. In any event, the city would have at its disposal large amounts of funds. As an additional feature, any depositor depositing in small amounts could, when his deposits amount to $500 or $1,000, have the privilege of taking a long-term bond. The above plan properly worked out technically is so simple that there should be no question of it being easily and economically handled as far as management is concerned. It offers no complex problems as some undertakings do, and it should therefore merely be a matter of getting an efficient bank official of experience in this kind of banking to run such an undertaking.

But it is not only a question of the saving of commissions and profits. The main point, as previously outlined, is that by establishing these offices of deposit it helps the citizens—the middle classes and the people of small means—to safeguard their savings, giving them easy facilities for depositing their savings at any time, with the assurance that they are absolutely secure. It would thus stimulate the habit of saving, instead of having this habit discouraged by experiences with some of the less safe places of deposit, for the money deposited with the city would be absolutely secure beyond any question of doubt. Besides this, the city has a trade-mark and credit which for this purpose is an asset of incalculable value and which should be used for its benefit. The advantage in creating a larger feeling of ownership in the city and interest in its affairs on the part of its citizens has already been touched on in my former article.

I do not think that such a system would detract materially from the deposits in the savings banks or trust companies, (it might from some of the less secure small private banking houses,) as it is quite likely that savings and deposits would be stimulated and thus expand. It should eventually have a good effect on securities and the investment market.

A short time ago the city borrowed $100,000,000. Shortly after this loan was made there was a profit of $3,000,000 to the subscribers. At the time this loan was negotiated the trust companies and banks had to pay not over 3 per cent. on their deposits, while the city is paying 4 per cent. on the loan above mentioned for one, two, and three years. A FULL HIGHWAY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is perhaps because I live in the western part of Putnam County that I have been particularly interested in the editorial in this morning's TIMES entitled "The Albany Post Road Grab." May I add another reason why Governor Whitman should veto the Slater bill repealing the law enacted twenty years ago to prevent the construction of trolley roads on the crowded Albany Post Road? Through the construction of the State Road, the Albany Post Road from New York to Peekskill has once more become the main highway from New York City northward to all points on the east bank of the Hudson River. The traffic thereon is increasing daily. Although originally laid out under the Act of 1703 as four rods, sixty-six feet wide, that road is in many places much narrower. With the advent of automobiles moving at high speed, public safety requires provision for paths outside of the traveled way for pedestrians, and even sixty-six feet does not leave much for that purpose, and for the ditches requisite to proper drainage.

Apart from all this, however, there is a project on foot to build at the public expense a new highway from New York northward up the general line of the valley of the Bronx River. Desirable as that is, its construction will take time, and presumably cost millions. At least until that road shall be built the interests of the citizens of this State in every county require that what is left of the old Albany Post Road unhampered by trolley lines shall so remain.

My business experience included many years in railroad service. Without fear of contradiction, I will say that the most bothersome and most expensive railroad rights of way we had to deal with were those which had in the early days been obtained by franchises for laying tracks in public streets of what were then villages and small towns, and subsequently grew to be cities. As time goes by the trolley companies will, if they have not already, meet with like experience. Looking to the future, it is not to the advantage of any trolley company to be forced to lay its rails in and along a public highway. The wiser and cheaper course is to buy and own rights of way, on which trains can be safely moved at high speed. This is and has been done in other States, and should certainly be done in New York. It goes without saying that the Governor should veto the Slater bill.

Let me say, finally, that my home in Putnam County is not on or near the Albany Post Road. That and the State Road simply serve me, as they do thousands of others, as a public highway, to which purpose the land in the Albany Post Road was by our Provincial Legislature dedicated more than two hundred years ago.

Marked by a Dream.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Of course, the medical sharps know it all, but let me tell what happened to me. I had a strikingly vivid dream in which I saw and spoke to a dead friend, and she emphasized what she said by laying her hand on my hair, a trick the dead girl had when living. The subject of her speech has no value. But when I woke I could almost feel her touch still. In a day or two I noticed my hair looked queer where she touched me, and it faded until I had four bare, almost white, across my red mop. Just such as would be made by four fingers.

KITTY MONTROSE.

New York, April 30, 1915.

CALIFORNIA HEIRESS WEDS AT WALDORF

Miss Eileen Canfield, Daughter of Late Oil King, Marries J. H. Himes of Canton, Ohio.

ILLNESS DELAYED WEDDING

Miss Eileen Canfield, daughter of the late C. A. Canfield of Los Angeles, Cal., who made a fortune in the oil business and is said to have left an estate of $25,000,000, was married yesterday in a private suite at the Waldorf to J. H. Himes, a steel manufacturer of Canton, Ohio. The wedding was to have taken place in Los Angeles, and the scene was shifted across the continent and the wedding postponed on account of the sudden illness of the bridegroom.

Mr. Himes met Miss Canfield during a trip to California about two years ago, and after he had won her consent to their marriage, the date of the ceremony was set for a month ago. Mr. Himes started for Los Angeles via Pittsburgh, and on his arrival at the latter city he was taken ill, and developed diphtheria. Friends telegraphed Miss Canfield, and, accompanied by her two sisters, Mrs. J. M. Danziger and Miss Dorothy Canfield, she started East, and reached Pittsburgh when her fiance was in a critical stage of his illness. She remained there until he became convalescent, and as soon as he was out of danger they decided that the wedding should take place in New York, and the honeymoon spent where he could recuperate. So she and her two sisters came to New York a little more than a week ago, and Mr. Himes arrived on Wednesday.

The parlor of Mrs. Danziger's suite had been lavishly decorated with American Beauty roses and orange blossoms, an orange tree in bloom being one of the main features. The bride wore a blue silk suit. The ceremony was performed by tht Rev. Howard Duffield, pastor of the Old First Presbyterian Church, at Fifth Avenue and Twelfth Street. Mrs. Danziger was matron of honor and Miss Dorothy Canfield was maid of honor. The best man was E. L. Diehl of Canton, Ohio, and E. L. Doheny of Los Angeles, who was an associate of the bride's father in the Mexican Petroleum Company and the California Oil Company, gave her away. During the afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Himes left for Atlantic City.

VERA BLOODGOOD TO WED.

Will Marry Charles Scribner, Jr., on May 26—The Attendants.

The wedding of Miss Vera Bloodgood, daughter of Hildreth K. Bloodgood, and Charles Scribner, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Scribner, whose engagement has just been announced, will be celebrated on Wednesday, May 26, at the Church of the Heavenly Rest, and will be followed by a reception at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. J. Macy Willets, 30 West Fifty-second Street.

Miss Bloodgood, since her début in society three seasons ago, has been identified with many of the horse shows in town and country, being a skilled horsewoman, and is fond of all outdoor sports. She has been spending the Winter in town with her sister. Her father's country estate is at New Marlboro, Mass.

Mr. Scribner is a Princeton University man, and belongs to the Union, Morris County Golf and Essex Fox Hounds Clubs. The Scribners' country home is at Morristown, N. J.

Mrs. Willets is to be her sister's matron of honor, and Mrs. George Saltonstall West, Mrs. Theodore P. Dixon, Mrs. Arthur A. Fowler and Miss Mary Rand of Minneapolis will be the other attendants.

Clarence Van S. Mitchell will be Mr. Scribner's best man. The ushers selected include J. Macy Willets, R. Tailer Townsend, Nicholas Tilney, G. Dawson Coleman of Philadelphia, Edward Law, Rudolph Rauch, Archibald D. Russell, Jr., and Philip Boyer.

HELEN M. SEIXAS ENGAGED.

Daughter of Mrs. Gershom A. Seixas to Wed A. Stedman Hills.

Mrs. Gershom A. Seixas announces the engagement of her daughter, Miss Helen Mayo Seixas, to A. Stedman Hills, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph A. Hills of 1,114 Commonwealth Avenue, Boston.

Miss Seixas is the youngest daughter of Mrs. Seixas and the late Gershom Arnold Seixas, for many years an attorney of this city. Mr. Hills was graduated from Harvard University, class of 1900, and from the Harvard Law School in 1905. He is a member of the Harvard Club of this city, the Amateur Comedy, and Atlantic Yacht Clubs.

Owing to the recent death of the bride's father, the wedding, which will be solemnized shortly in All Angels' Church, will be a quiet one.

Snapping Bonbons Tell Engagement

The engagement was announced last evening of Frederick Godfrey Heller, elder son of Mrs. H. E. Heller of Barnet, England, assistant head of the passenger department of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company of New York, to Miss Hazel May Austin, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Edward Austin of 1,030 Ocean Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. The guests were informed of the engagement through the medium of cards in snapping bonbons, in which they were inclosed, with the regular cap and motto. Among those at the bridge were guests from Canada, Chicago, and Larchmont. They included Mr. and Mrs. Walter Bain Force and Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Hawley Muir.

Lathrop-Starring Engagement Off.

The engagement of Miss Gertrude Farquhar Lathrop, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alanson P. Lathrop of 390 West End Avenue, to Mason B. Starring, Jr., has been broken by mutual consent. Mr. Starring was formerly of Chicago, but now lives in New York. The announcement of the engagement was made at a luncheon given by Mrs. Lathrop in January.

SOCIAL NOTES.

Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., has leased Mrs. Lorillard Spencer's villa, Chastelleux, in Wellington Avenue, Newport, for the coming season.

Charles Stewart Davison will give a luncheon at Sherry's on May 12, for his cousin, Miss Gwendolyn Frothingham, the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Richard Frothingham, to be followed by a matinée party.

The wedding of Miss Mary Nammack, daughter of Dr. Charles E. Nammack of 42 East Twenty-ninth Street and John Neville Boyle will take place on Tuesday, May 11, in the Lady Chapel of St. Patrick's Cathedral. A bridal breakfast will follow at the home of the bride's father. The couple will spend their honeymoon in California and the Canadian Rockies.

A tea dance and sale will be held tomorrow afternoon in aid of the New York Home for Convalescents, at the Hotel Gotham, from 2 to 6 o'clock. Miss Mary Van Beuren Vanderpoel of 30 East Fifty-third Street is in charge of the arrangements.

Mrs. Colin Carter is the guest of Justice and Mrs. Charles E. Hughes in Washington.

F. C. TANNER TO MARRY.

Chairman of Republican State Committee Engaged to Jane Ogden.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., May 6.—The engagement of Miss Jane Ogden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ogden of this city, to Frederick C. Tanner, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, was announced here today. Miss Ogden, a tall blonde, has been a favorite in the younger set of society both in this city and in New Orleans. She made her debut three years ago.

Charles Ogden, father of Miss Ogden, is a prominent architect at the Capitol. Miss Ogden is a graduate of St. Agnes School in Albany and spent two years in Miss Bennett's finishing school at Millbrook, N. Y. Two years ago she made an extensive tour of Europe, Egypt, and the Nile, and while abroad was received in audience at the Vatican by the late Pope Pius X. She is interested in many charities and during the last Winter formed a sewing class for the relief of the Belgian sufferers.

Mr. Tanner, who is here as a delegate to the Constituional Convention, was born in Jacksonville, Ill., and is 37 years of age. His father, Edward A. Tanner, was President of Illinois College. The late Stewart L. Woodford, who was a Brigadier General in the civil war, and subsequently Lieutenant Governor of this State and United States Minister to Spain during the period preceding the Spanish-American War, was his counsin.

Mrs. Charles Ogden announced her daughter's engagement at a luncheon given at the Ogden residence. Mrs. Charles S. Whitman, wife of Govenor Whitman, attended the luncheon. The other guests included Mrs. Russel Sard, Hiland Batcheller, Moncure Carpenter, Frederick Peabody, Kenneth Ogden, Willis Hanson, Jr., Richard MacDonald Nelson, and the Misses Alice Williams, Dorothy Arnold, Eleanor Twining, Grace Carter, Ruth Peabody, Peggy Cox, Wynahda Boardman, Lila Paige, Marjorie Waterman, and Marjorie Whitney.

GET THEIR MARRIAGE LICENSE.

John F. Fisk, 3d, and Miss Alverta M. Holland to Wed May 12.

John Flanel Fisk, 3d, and Miss Alverta Mae Holland obtained a marriage license yesterday at City Hall from Clerk Skully and their wedding will take place on Wednesday, May 12, at the St. Regis.

Miss Holland, who is the daughter of Charles Wesley Holland of 449 Park Avenue, gave her age as 22 years and Mr. Fisk, who is a broker and whose home is at 1,414 South Pennsylvania Square, Philadelphia, gave his age as 24.

LOIS CAMPBELL WINS $18,000,000 WILL SUIT

Jury Decides She Is Traction Man's Daughter and Entitled to Share of His Estate.

ST. LOUIS, May 6.—A unanmous verdict in favor of the defendants in the Campbell will case was returned by the jury here tonight. The verdct declares Lois Campbell, now Mrs. Burkham, to be the daughter of James Campbell and therefore entitled to the half of his $16,000,000 estate, which was willed to her.

Upon application of attorneys for the defense, Circuit Judge Kinsey immediately after the verdict was returned, dismissed the entire case, thereby denying the contestants the right to a trial upon their allegations that Campbell was of unsound mind and that he was unduly influenced in making the will by members of the Church to which the property eventually would go after the death of his wife and daughter. The contestants have four days in which to apply for a rehearing.

The jury was out two hours and fifteen minutes.

The contestants of the will of James Campbell sought to prove that Mrs. Lois Campbell Burkham was not his daughter but a child that he had adopted. In the course of the trial Mrs. Edith Blair of St. Louis testified that Lois Campbell was the daughter of her stepdaughter, a Mrs. Anna Elizabeth Hicks, who was said to be now living in England as the wife of a Duke. She said that James Campbell had called on her and admitted that this was the parentage of Lois Campbell, and had asked her to remain silent concerning it.

The contestants in the case were the nephew, nieces, and only living sister of the dead capitalist, and their attorneys announced at the beginning of the trial that they would try to prove that Lois Campbell was a child from a foundling home in this city.

The widow, Mrs. Florence Campbell, would have been the gainer if the will had been broken, as she would have received outright one-third of the entire estate under the laws of Missouri. The will was filed in that State soon after the financier's death at his Summer home in Greenwich, Conn., on June 12, 1914. Campbell left the bulk of his estate to St. Louis University, a Jesuit College, to go to the institution on the death of the last child of his daughter, if she has children, and if not, upon her death. Mrs. Campbell and Mrs. Burkham are to receive only the income from the estate, which amounts to between $400,000 and $500,000 a year.

TO PROTECT FRENCH NAME.

Plan to Limit Its Use as Trade Designation.

PARIS, May 6.—The Commerce Committee of the Chamber of Deputies decided today to recommend the passage by the Chamber of a law prohibiting the use of the designation "French" for products of business houses of which one or more of the directors are foreigners, which are not governed exclusively by French laws or which are branches of foreign enterprises. The same prohibition is to be extended to all products which are not made in France or the colonies.

Enterprises which under the restrictions will be compelled to drop the designation "French" will have a year's time in which to eliminate the word from their advertising, firm names and stationery.

OFFER 100,000 AUSTRALIANS

Events in the Dardanelles Serve to Stimulate Recruiting.

LONDON, Friday, May 7.—The Sydney correspondent of The Morning Post says he understands that the difficulty of equipment which hitherto has restricted the number of men sent from Australia, is likely to be met by an arrangement with the War Office whereby the deficiencies in Australia, especially with regard to rifles, are to be supplied by the Imperial authorities.

Recent events in the Dardanelles have stimulated recruiting in Australia, and this is emphasized by the fact that there is no difficulty in obtaining large bodies of suitable men. The Prime Minister recently stated that the extent of Australian assistance in resources and men was unlimited. This statement, the correspondent adds, is likely to be converted into concrete form as a result of the discussions now taking place at Premier's conference. It is expected that a definite offer of one hundred thousand men will be made.

$10,000 FOR THE RED CROSS

Giver Withholds His Name—Money to be Used in Europe.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—The American Red Cross Society was informed today that the largest single anonymous contribution it had ever received had been placed to its credit with the Girard Trust Company of Philadelphia. The trust company in informing the Red Cross Society of the gift, simply said that the giver's name was not to be disclosed.

A contribution is a claer gift, with the single condition that the fund "be used on the field of action in the present European war, wherever the Red Cross Society may find the need most urgent and without regard to the nationality of those who may benefit by its aid."

RUSSIA AIMS BLOW AT IVAN NARODNY

Consul Prints Advertisement Repudiating Head of Russian Chamber of Commerce.

WARNS AMERICANS, HE SAYS

Asserts Promoter's Name Is Assumed and Says He Has No Connection with Czar's Government.

P. de Routsky, Russian Consul in this city, is sponsor for an advertisement in THE NEW YORK TIMES today, in effect repudiating Ican Narodny, the Managing Director of the Russian Chamber of Commerce with offices at 141 Broadway, as a Russian citizen or as one having any connection with the Government of Russia. Here is the advertisement:

The Russian Imperial Consulate General at New York wishes to notify a ll whom it may concern that the person who, under the assumed named of "Ivan Narodny," represents himself as the Managing IDrector of a so-called "Russian Chamber of Commerce," with offices at 141 Broadway, is not registered as a Russian citizen, a nd, moreover, has absolutely no connection with any departments of the Imperial Government, the Imperial Embassy or the Consulate General.

M. de Routsky said last night that the advertisement was being published for the protection of American business men.

"The Russian Government takes no stand for or against any scheme or plans of Ivan Narodny," he said. "The advertisement is simply a warning for the protection of Americans that money invested in the so-called Chamber of Commerce is not guaranteed by the Russian Government."

M. de Routsky said that the embassy authorities at 22 Washington Square North had received many inquiries from persons approached by Mr. Narodny, who had been left under the impression that his enterprise had the backing of the Imperial Russian Government.

"This is done under orders," added M. de Routsky significantly.

"Orders from whom?" was asked.

M. de Routsky shrugged his shoulders. Michael M. Ustinoff, the Consul General, on whose authority M. de Routsky acted in publishing the advertisement, refused to be seen last night. He sent word by a butler that his business hours were from 10 to 2 in the daytime. A second request for information brought the message that the advertisement was self-explanatory, and said all that the Embassy wished said.

Mr. Narodny, who lives at 950 East 180th Street, the Bronx, said he could not understand such an attack on him. He laughed at the statement that he was not registered as a Russian citizen, inasmuch, he said, as he had been a citnzen of the United States for several of the seven years he had been in this country. He said he had been a political refugee from Russia, but hoped some day to go back. As for the charge that Narodny was not his own name, he laughed again and said it was the only name he knew.

"The Consulate is perturbed because we have declined to run this Chamber of Commerce according to its view," he said. "We organized in January and are doing well. Our desire is to foster trade between Russia and the United States, and we are ready to deal with anyone who will helps us do this. The Consulate refused its support when we declined to bar Jews," Mr. Narodny went on. "I don't know why I should be attacked except for the reason that I have been a Radical and a refugee and, of course, not persona grata at the Consulate."

In an article published some years ago over his own signature and purporting to be a chapter of a book Narodny was then writing, he told of his mysterious escape from Dom Predvaritelnavo Zakultchenia, where he was imprisoned as a political offender. A beautiful girl, with whom he communicated by letters tied to neck of a dove, was the means, according to Narodny, of his escape, and, after she had arranged for this, presumably by bribing high officials, he never saw her again. Narodny has frequently told of the confiscation of his estates in the Baltic provinces and of his hope some day of recovering his fortune.

BIG CRACKS IN ARMORY WALL

Cracks, four to seven feet long, appeared yesterday in the Fifteenth Street wall of the Fourteenth Regiment Armory in Eighth Avenue, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth Streets, Brooklyn, and last night the police had Fifteenth Street between Seventh and Eighth Avenues closed to all traffic, except to persons living in apartments across the street.

Old residents of the neighborhood recalled that there had once been a swimming pool where part of the armory foundation is now built, and it is feared that the foundation may be found to be a bog. Government engineers will inspect the plant today.

The armory was built about twenty-two years ago. It is of brick and fronts for the whole block in Eighth Avenue, extending back into Fifteenth and Fourteenth Streets about 400 feet. The cracks are in the wall near the Seventh Avenue side. Policeman eKarns of the Fifth Avenue Station discovered them about 3 o'clock. Then there were only four or five. He notified Captain Barnes, who telephones to the Building Department, and within an hour Superintendent Patrick J. Carlin had men at work shoring up the wall. By nightfall several more cracks had appeared.

Mr. Carlin did not order the tenements opposite to be vacated, but he advised the guard at each end of the street to stop the Fifteenth Street crosstown surface cars, whose operation may have weakened the wall.

HELD HERE BY KIDNAPPERS.

Youth Tells Denver Police Bootblack Stole Him from Parents.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, May 6.—Harry Dobson, who arrived here from New York City this morning, immediately called at Police Headquarters, where he said that he had been stolen from his parents when a child and made to work for an Italian bootblack in Manhattan ever since.

"I've had a hard time of it," he said, "and several weeks ago one of the older men told me I had been kidnapped from Denver. I ran away from my employer, and am here to try to find my parents. I believe I was born Feb. 12, 1894."

Dobson told the police he did not know his real name. He said he was a mere cvhild when kidnapped, had been made to work like a slave, but never received any money except for small incidentals. He "beat" his way to Denver.

JAPAN WANTS ACTION.

No True Friendship Possible While America Continues Discrimination.

Relations with the United States continue to absorb a great deal of attention of the leading publications of Japan.

"Evidently there prevails," says the Japan Magazine, "a profound degree of dissatisfaction everywhere among the Japanese people with regard to conditions in California, and the misconceptions of the newspapers but add to the acuteness of the situation. If the vernacular press at all represents the nation as a whole, there is a very wide ignorance in Japan as to the American people. The fact that the Japanese press represents the American attitude as altogether unreasonable and unjust, while the United States seems quite unconscious of any such defection, is in itself sure proof that something is wrong somewhere.

"The reiterated statement in the press that in California there is express and deliberate discrimination against the Japanese is calculated to greatly prejudice the situation, since this point is not conceded by the people across the Pacific. It now appears more evident than ever that the Japanese must demand rights of naturalization in the United States before they demand rights of land ownership, seeing that the latter right is being more and more limited to citizens or those entitled to become such.

"The Kokumin Shimbun aptly says that it doubts whether relations with America can be improved by the present method of merely shaking hands and exchanging cordial compliments. In answer to Japan's complaints against injustice to her nationals, America merely sends over messengers to tell the Japanese how much America loves them, a policy which is obviously futile. The friendship of the two nations, continues the Kokumin, cannot be preserved for any length of time on a basis of discrimination. If America really cares for friendship with the Japanese she should accord them equal treatment with Europeans. So long as the Japanese are subjected to discriminatory treatment in any part of the United States there is no hope of any permanent friendship between the two nations, insists the paper.

"This is a very frank expression of opinion, and coming as it does from one of the foremost journals of the empire, it should not only carry weight but should be as frankly met and answered. Such expressions of opinion in Japan have been frequent and oft repeated, but no voice from the American side replies. There is no one even to ask the Kokumin to state clearly and specifically wherein there is direct or deliberate discrimination against the Japanese. It is clear that so long as America does not meet the charge and answer it Japan will feel more and more aggrieved and Americans will not be doing their country justice. If both parties would but cease discussing friendship between the two countries and deal definitely with the grievances advanced by Japan, there would be some hope of a solution. This can be done better in the press than by diplomacy. It is a public question and demands public treatment."

Of the view of the situation as seen by the Nichi-Nichi, another of the great Japanese dailies, The Japan Magazine says:

"While the outlook has thus improved, the Nichi-nichi is not so sanguine as to suppose that all difficulties have ceased or that peace is now assured. The anti-Japanese sentiment in America is only quiescent; it has yet to be completely rooted out. There are signs of movements in certain States toward greater restriction of Japanese freedom, and the Germans in America are doing all in their power to create misunderstandings between that country and Japan. Both in Australia and the United States the laws affecting Japanese are yet in force, and no stone should be left unturned to have them revoked or modified. Until such improvements are accomplished Japan cannot be too optimistic.

"Most of the respect shown to Japan today is not due so much to love of her as to fear of her great naval and military power. Until the west becomes acquainted with the real beauty of Japanese civilization it will not be likely to feel a proper interest in good relations with this country. This should be the work of scholars and religious teachers on both sides of the Pacific. As for China, she will not assume a proper attitude toward Japan until other foreign nations set the example."

LAWYERS GET $100,000 FEE.

Claflin Receivers Report $13,605,000 Business Done Up to Feb. 6.

Judge Hand approved yesterday the payment of $100,000 to Rushmore, Bisbee & Stern, receivers' attorneys in the Claflin reorganization. He reserved decision on the application of the receivers, Joseph B. Martindale, President of the Chemical National Bank, and Frederic A. Juilliard of A. D. Juilliard & Co., for $100,000.

It is expected that there will also be a payment of about $100,000, divided between White & Case, attorneys for the noteholders' committee, and Rosenberg, Levis & Ball, counsel for the General Creditors' Committee. When all the fees have been paid, whatever remains of the $500,000 set aside by court order for the expenses of the receivership will revert to the Mercantile Stores Corporation.

Some facts concerning the work of the receivers were set forth in their application for fees. From June 24, 1914, to Feb. 6 last, they did a business of $13,605,000, and bought $9,275,000 worth of domestic goods and $293,000 of foreign manufacture. Thei gross receipts were from accounts receivable, $14,903; from European branches for goods sold, $350,000; from bills receivable, $488,000, and from other scources, $15,000. On Feb. 6 the receiver had on hand in cash $6,339,552, and since then they have made other large sales and collected other considerable sums.

ALL CALL EDISON WORLD BENEFACTOR

Carnegie Hall Crowded as Dr. Butler Presents Civic Forum Gold Medal.

WILSON SENDS GREETINGS

Marconi Eulogizes Fellow-Inventor—Publicists and Scientists Add Praise—Poem Is Read.

"Inventor and World Benefactor" was the inscription on the gold medal of the Civic Forum which was presented to Thomas A. Edison last night in Carnegie Hall as a national testimonial. President Butler of Columbia University, who presided and made the presentation, said:

"This gold medal is not awarded for any particular achievement, but for distinguished services and great scientific achievements and in recognition of a great career, which has a place among the very highest in the roll of human history."

Not all the friends and admirers of the inventor and scientist who went to the hall to pay him honor were able to get inside. All the seats from gallery to stage were occupied when Mr. and Mrs. Edison walked with the speakers to the front of the platform. The great audience of men and women stood when Mr. Edison and the others on the stage arose as the presentation was made. Those who expected that Mr. Edison would talk to them were disappointed when he resumed his seat after a whispered conference with Dr. Butler, who announced:

"Mr. Edison has whispered to me that 'actions speak louder than words in appreciation.'"

President Wilson sent this message to Mr. Edison, through Isaac W. Seligman:

The White House,
Washington, D. C., May 6, 1915.

Please present my sincere and most cordial greetings to Mr. Edison this evening, and say how happy I would be if it were possible for me to be present to express my great admiration of his distinguished services and achievements.

WOODROW WILSON.

Ex-Presidents Send Greetings.

Letters from ex-President Theodore Roosevelt and ex-President Wiliam H. Taft, Alexander Graham Bell, and others were read by Robert Erskine Ely, a trustee of the Forum. Those who lauded the work and personality of Mr. Edison n addresses were Ncholas Murray Butler, ex-Governor J. Franklin Fort of New Jersey, George McAneny, Gugliemo Marconi, President Richard C. Maclaurin of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Charles A. Coffin, Chairman of the Board of the General Electric Company; Dr. John A. Brashear, the Pittsburgh astronomer, and Dr. Charles P. Steinmetz.

Percy Mackaye recited a poem he had wrtten for the occasion. Here are the opening stanzas:

A thousand leagues on the Arctic sea
A ship went down through the frozen flo:
Captain and crew they watched her go:
They ran her colors free;
They cheered her lustily;
And far peoples chanted her praise with them
Where a phonograph from her plunging stem,
Pealed to the stars her requiem.
A thousand leagues through the Afric wood
A man went looting the jungle wealth:
Leopard nor lion could stay his stealth.
Nor sleeping death nor flood:
He drew not the monsters' blood,
But he led tthem alive through the scorching day
By a tap eof moving film, to play
With the wondering children of Broadway.
A thousand leagues, or a thousand years,
Are motes in the gaze of the seeking mind:
By its own radiance thought can find
Its way to ultimate spheres
Dark, till its beam appears
To blazen them. So on that beam hath run—
Round Arctic moon and Afric sun—
The electric mind of Edison.

The medal, which is one awarded annually by the Civic Forum for distinguished public service, was massive and elaborate.

"Master of Nature's Forces."

"The ceremony for which we have gathered here, with the public as the jury of award, is characteristically and significantly American," said President Butler. "We are gathered to award this medal to Thomas A. Edison, seer, wizard, and master of the forces of nature, who has bent them in many ways to the service, happiness, and uplifting of mankind. If the European war represents the triumph of brute force over the better nature of man, this award represents the triumph of man's better nature over brute force.

"I remember at the Centennial in 1876 the one object shown as the most remarkable invention of that time was a single arc light. If you would seek a monument of Mr. Edison, look about you."

Ex-Governor Fort said Mr. Edison was the "most modest great man of the present time."

"He has made more men and women and children laugh than any other man, and has made it possible for more people to be amused than has any one else in the history of the world," he continued. "Nothing is impossible to Edison. He is no eight-hour-day man. He has done all this by the hardest kind of work, day and night. There is nothing selfish about him; he cares nothing for money. All those who know him love him. Thomas A. Edison is an uncrowned king among men."

Mr. Marconi asserted that the entire world acclaimed Thomas A. Edison as friend and benefactor.

Edison's Definition of Genius.

President MacLaurin said:

"Some one asked Lord Kelvin why no one before Edison had invented so simple a thing as the feeder system. 'The only reason I can think of,' he replied, 'is that no one else was Edison.' Mr. Edison has proved himself a great force in education by giving so brilliant an exhibition of the method of science, the method of experimentation. His other great contribution to the progress of education has been his constant insistence on the gospel of work.

"Genius was long ago described as 'an infinite capacity for faking pains.' We all feel this to be inadequate, and Edison has put the underlying thought more accurately and more forcibly by his aphorism that 'genius is 1 per cent. inspiration and 99 per cent. perspiration.'"

Sappokanican Club's May Party.

The Sappokanican Club for neighborhood improvement will give a May party to the children of Greenwich Village at Ernest Thompson Seton's place at Greenwich, Conn., on Saturday, May 15. Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, and others have obtained automobiles to take the children out. John L. Mannay, President of the club, asks that offers to lend additional cars may be addressed to him, at 27 Grove Street.

SUFFRAGE POSTERS ON VIEW

At the gallery of the Society of Beaux Arts Architects are the designs submitted for the Woman Suffrage Campaign Poster Competition. They will remain on exhibition until May 18. Regarded as products of artistic training they are rather disappointing, and not many arguments in favor of the cause are lucidly presented. The color scheme imposed, ripe orange, black, and white, lends itself so successfully to salient effect that in this direction, at least, even the poorer designs would answer the purpose of directing attention to the date appointed for casting the vote.

One design, that contributed by Abbey L. Cleaves, shows a line of automobiles swinging along the way to the polls. The required legend, "Vote for the Woman Suffrage Amendment, Nov. 2, 1915," in bold black letters constitutes the rest of the design, which is excellent in every respect, but failed—probably for some technical reason—to gain an award.

The poster that won the first prize is by Reuben Randolph Purcell, and the theme of war is adroitly carried out, but bars it from the billboards, where it is forbidden to show firearms. Eugene Higgins and Anne Merriam Peck each show a reasonably good design, and Mary Lowell Boyd has one that is clever in detail and spacing, but vanishes from view on account of the absence of a clear bounding line.

Adelaide Everson and Nathalie Matson win secondary prizes and honorable mention is given to Frederic W. Freeman, Nancy Elizabeth Barnhart, Selma Hilborn, Mary M. Collins, Alabama Brenton, Elsie S. Newell, Helen A. Mitchell, and Mary L. Lloyd.

Mrs. Josephine Young Birney.

Mrs. Jasephine Young Birney of Ossining, mother of Mrs. De Lancey Nicoll of 23 East Thirty-ninth Street, died yesterday morning at Roosevelt Hospital in her 68th year. She was taken to the hospital after attending the memorial services of her grand-daughter, Miss Josephine Churchill Nicoll, last Thursday, who died at her home on the Monday before, after a short illness. Mrs. Birney was operated on several days ago, and failed to rally. She was a daughter of the late Henry and Anne Mason Young, and was first married to Richard Cuyler Churchill, and was the mother of two children, Mrs. De Lancey Nicoll, who was Miss Maud Churchill, and was married to De Lancey Nicoll in 1890, and Richard Churchill, both of whom survive her. Her second husband was the late William G. Birney. Her funeral will be held at the home of her daughter, 23 East Thirty-ninth Street, on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock.

Professor William B. Graves.

William B. Graves, professor-emeritus of natural sciences at Phillips-Andover Academy, died yesterday at Andover, Mass., in his eighty-second year. He was born at Fairlee, Vt., and was the father of Henry S. Graves, United States Forester. Professor Graves was graduated from Amherst in 1862 and, after teaching matematics at his alma mater, went to Phillips-Andover in 1866, where he remained until 1870, when he took the chair of natural sciences at Marietta College. In 1874 he went to the Massachusetts Agricultural College as professor of mathematicse and later returned to Phillips-Andover, where he taught until 1909 and retired. He was a member of the American Social Science Association and the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

ARGENTINA TO GET $25,000,000 HERE

London Will Supply Other Half of $50,000,000 Wanted by South American Republic.

RUNS 5 YEARS AT 6%

Being Offered in Britain at 99—National City Bank Handling New York End of Loan.

Negotiations between bankers in New York and London, on one hand, and Treasury officials of Argentina on the other, for a loan of $50,000,000 were so near completion yesterday that only the settlement of minor details was being awaited before making a formal announcement. The loan is to be shared equally and a public offering of the $25,000,000 taken here will be made shortly.

It was first proposed to meet the refunding needs of Argentina, amounting to approximately $40,000,000, by means of a running, short-term, or budgetary loan, similar to the arrangement made by New York City in anticipation of taxes. Afterward plans for a sale of $40,000,000 of long-term bonds were discussed, but were abandoned in favor of an issue of $50,000,000 in five-year notes, [illegible] take care of the maturing obligations and leave about $10,000,000 for other uses.

The American end of the transaction has been handled by the National City Bank, with which will be associated Kuhn, Loeb & Co., J. P. Morgan & Co., the First National Bank, Harris, Forbes & Co., and others. The offering price of the new securities had not been agreed upon last night, it was said. The English half of the loan is being offered in London at 99.

The entrance of New York bankers into Argentina's financing is regarded as a direct result of the establishment at Buenos Aires of a branch of the National City Bank, and it is expected to open the way for a larger share of South American trade.

British bankers are not allowed to make any loans outside of Great Britain during the war, except by special permission of the British Treasury. This permission was granted in the case of Argentina for two reasons. English bankers are anxious to retain their present commanding position in Argentina's trade, and more than half of the maturing obligations, for the refunding of which the new loan is being issued, are held in London. A large part of the money subscribed through New York will accordingly be placed to the credit of British banks here. Baring Brothers of London are handling the British end of the transaction.

Of the $50,000,000 of one-year 5 per cent. notes offered here a few weeks ago by France only a little more than one-half were subscribed for by American investors. It is the belief of bankers associated with the Argentina loan of the same amount that this sale furnished no criterion of the probable reception which will be given the South American notes, since it has been made clear that the lack of popular support for the French offering was due to the fact that the money was for use of a [illegible] [re]sult in other South American financing operations here.

ENTERTAIN LATIN DELEGATES.

The 147th annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce yesterday was converted into a reception to sixteen delegates from South and Central American countries to the Pan-American Financial Conference, who were headed by Samuel Hale Pearson, a Director in the Bank of the Nation of the Argentine. Following the usual luncheon, where the delegates met leading bankers and business men of the city, they were taken to a room off Secretary S. S. Pratt's office where special telephone wires had been placed at the order of President Theodore N. Vail of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company which connected with the long distance line to San Francisco.

Arrangements had been made for Mr. Pearson to talk with the representatives of the Argentine at the Panama Exposition at San Francisco. All told fifty receivers were in the room and for more than an hour messages were interchanged between the South Americans in New York and their friends in the coast city, while officers of the Chamber of Commerce talked with members of the San Francisco Chamber. The delegates were much impressed with the feat of sending spoken messages 3,400 miles.

Mr. Pearson, introduced by Vice President John I. Waterbury, at the meeting in the Chamber said that bankers and business men of South and Central American countries hoped that the conference at Washington would reestablish the commercial integrity between the United States and the Southern republics," which was much greater fifty years ago than it is today.

"I suppose this is partly owing to the fact that your own country has grown so rapidly," he continued, "that it has required all its strength and all the support of the great American financial men to build it up. You have reached today, I won't say your limit, but a moment of great prosperity, and it is now the moment opportune to extend your wings to your neighbors and our smaller republics. We require the help of these great central financial men, and you will allow me to express in the name of myself and all of my colleagues the great appreciation that we feel to have been invited to the 147th annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, where we find the financial brain of this great nation, and you will allow me to say that I do not say the first in the world, because as a financial centre I must admit that London has been for us always our help and friend. But I hope that in the United States, now at this moment that Europe cannot extend to us the forms of credit and help, we will find them here in New York."

Mr. Pearson concluded by saying that he desired to thank the National City Bank for opening the first branch of American banks in South America. Several other institutions, he said, had in the last few days opened commercial relations with the Bank of the Argentine.

The annual election of officers of the Chamber of Commerce resulted in the selection of Seth Low as President for his second consecutive year. New Vice Presidents, elected to serve until May, 1919, were Cleveland H. Dodge, Henry Hentz, and Eugene Delano.

Remunerative Investments

The fact that certain kinds of well secured mortgage bonds provide larger incomes than others equally well secured deserves the consideration of every investor. In our latest circular we describe a number of bonds of the kind which give the best returns that can be obtained from tested investments. We invite requests for this Circular No. 159.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

There was much less trading on the Stock Exchange, and for the most part prices showed recoveries from the sharp break of the previous day. The decline of Wednesday, coupled with that of Monday, brought sufficient losses in a number of stocks to have caused further unsettlement yesterday under ordinary circumstances. Yesterday's firmness thus indicated that the market circumstances are somewhat unusual. They are unusual for one thing in that there appears to have been much less over-extention than is usual at the culmination of a prolonged forward movement. It is being said in the financial district, and probably said on good ground, that the increase in the floating supply of stocks during the recent advance was smaller in proportion to the rise than the increase in the supply of stocks on the occasion of any other advance in recent years. For the explanation of this fact we have to go back to the thoroughly liquidated position which existed at the start of the forward movement. A further explanation lies in the undoubted optimism of the public and in the fact that a great deal of the recent buying was done for the account of those outside of Wall Street. During a large part of the forward movement the public took more stocks out of the market than it brought into it. It may be that initial margins have been no stronger during the recent rise in prices than in other bull markets, but there has in all probability been less wild speculating of the pyramiding type, less use of paper profits, in other words, of the margining of additional commitments. There has surely been less objectionable manipulative operations, which frequently in the past created conditions which added greatly to the weakness of the market when a period of liquidation ensued after a large advance.

Had the market been as much concerned as some were disposed to think over the war news—had that, in other words, been the primary instead of the secondary cause of this week's reaction—it would be difficult to account for the steadying of prices yesterday. The uncertainty caused by the Gulflight incident has not been lifted, the danger of war between Japan and China has not passed and the war news from Europe is no more to the market's liking than it was early in the week. But the decline in the market had for the time being corrected the main forces making for reaction, and thus the downward movement ceased or, at least, halted, despite the fact that good war news had not ensued upon the bad war news of the earlier days of the week.

An announcement in which the stock market will take much more than casual interest is made by the Amalgamated Copper Company, which proposes to dissolve. Holding companies are no longer considered as necessary as they once were, and this company, one of the most conspicuous of the holding companies created during the period of industrial expansion a dozen or more years ago, now finds advantage to its stockholders in dissolving and distributing its assets. The property which the Amalgamated Copper Company represents will hereafter be owned by the stockholders directly through an operating company instead of indirectly through a holding company. It is an interesting illustration of a movement which promises to have further ramifications.

Argentina is again to borrow in this market by an issue of $30,000,000 five-year 6 per cent. notes which is to be taken half here and half in London. This is one of several Argentine issues which the British Treasury has permitted to be floated in the English market confessedly with the object of protecting the large financial interests which England already has in that country. May it not also be that in permitting this financing for Argentina England has an eye to avoiding the complete transfer of Argentina's financial dealings from London and the Continent to the United States? It is to be expected that our entrance into what is for us a new field will bring trade advantages in its wake and it is only natural that England should seek to safeguard her own trade and financial interests wherever she finds it possible to do so without conflicting with the supreme demands which the war is making upon her. So far as our own part in this proposed new financing is concerned it is worthy of note that this is not a war loan, although it is the war in Europe which leads Argentina to seek here the accommodation which under other circumstances she would almost certainly look for in Europe exclusively. Some of the war loans offered here have not received very hearty support and no doubt for the very reason that they were war loans. That is a fact which will have to be taken count of in any further financing for belligerent countries which may be publicly undertaken here. It is natural that more interest should be taken in financing which looks to the opening up of new trade opportunities than in financing which represents in the main an accommodation to countries which find it inconvenient to pay us for what they buy because they are at war.

LONDON MARKET IRREGULAR

Far Eastern Situation Weakens Chinese and Japanese Bonds.

LONDON, May 6.—Money and discount rates were quiet today.

The stock market developed irregularity. The Far East situation weakened Chinese and Japanese bonds and made Russian securities dull. Kaffirs continued firm and a good business was recorded in investment stocks, especially war loans. Coppers advanced early, but later declined.

American securities were moderately active with most of the business in Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, Canadian Pacific and United States Steel. Prices sagged in the afternoon and the market closed easy.

It was reported that another $2,500,000 in gold is being shipped from Paris to New York.

Trading Dull on Paris Bourse.

PARIS, May 6.—Trading was dull on the Bourse today. Three per cent. rentes 72 francs 50 centimes for cash. Exchange on London 25 francs 57½ centimes.

Start Bank in Acquackanonk.

Special to The New York Times.

PASSAIC, N. J., May 6.—The Clifton Trust Company, the only banking institution in Acquackanonk Township, formally opened its doors to the public at 9 o'clock this morning. The bank was started largely through the efforts of Major Isaac A. Hall, Paterson financier and manufacturer, who started the German-American Trust Company of Paterson many years ago. Interested in the institution are a number of Paterson and Passaic men and several from the township. William E. Hughey of Paterson is President and George F. Schmidt, Chairman of the Acquackanonk Township Committee, the township governing body, is Vice President. The bank started with a capital of $100,000

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

An Office On Wheels.

A wealthy and aged man, whose infirmities make it impossible for him to get around without the help of an attendant, has worked a way out of his problem of transacting business downtown. A large limousine car has been fitted with a desk top reaching from door to door, and the owner sits back in his cushioned corner with his secretary facing him across the desk. People whom the financier desires to see are accommodated with a seat next to the secretary. It is a strange contrast that is furnished by the sight of the car drawn up in front of a safe deposit vault in Broad Street, with the owner checking up his bonds and clipping coupons, while a Socialist street speaker is holding forth on the crimes of capital before a crowd that ebbs and flows around the front wheels of the millionaire's portable office.

Looking Backward.

It is only by diligent search that any one can be found in the financial district now who was not urged by some one close to the Bethlehem management to buy that company's stock before the rise got under way. The post mortem price at which Tom, Dick and Harry were advised to purchase seems to have been 85 in each case. The amount of good information which has been wasted on unappreciative investors is appalling. It is certain that if every one who now remembers having been told about the Bethlehem rise had entered the market at the time, the upward movement would have started almost simultaneously with the European war.

Western Pacific Committee.

A protective committee for the $50,000,000 Western Pacific first mortgage bonds, on which interest was defaulted on March 1, has been formed by bankers interested in Western Pacific finances. Steps were taken a month ago to organize such a committee, but the plan of Rudolph Spreckels to let the State of California own and operate the Western Pacific delayed definite action. None of the bankers and railroad men closely associated with the Gould coast road ever believed California would take their troubles off their hands. They hoped Mr. Spreckels might be right, but when they heard what the citizens of California thought of the project they decided his plan was a failure. It is expected the protective committee, the membership of which has not yet been made public, will call for a deposit of the first mortgage bonds. Under the indenture no action can be taken in the court against the Denver & Rio Grande, which guaranteed the interest on the bonds, until Sept. 1—that is, six months after the first interest was defaulted. Lawyers say that in case of a second default on the Western Pacific bonds there must be another delay of six months before suit can be brought against the Denver for the second installment of interest. While Denver officials are free to say that the Denver cannot pay the interest, they maintain that no critical situation has yet arisen for the Denver Road. If the Denver passed into receivership, it is pointed out, it might get rid of the burdensome contract whereby it guarantees the interest on the Western Pacific bonds.

Rock Island Buys Rails.

H. U. Mudge and Colonel J. M. Dickinson, receivers for the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway, looked in at the Rock Island offices at 14 Wall Street yesterday. It was Colonel Dickinson's first view of the sumptuous suite, and he seemed much impressed. He wanted to get acquainted with all departments of the railway, he said. The receivers announced that the Rock Island would purchase 10,000 tons of steel rails for needed track improvement. Normal rail purchases of about 40,000 tons for the year, they said, would probably be made in the course of the year. Mr. Mudge said he had just come through a section of the cereal belt traversed by the Rock Island lines. Crop conditions were as good as in 1914, he said, and indicated a prosperous year.

Interborough Consolidated.

Holders of the preferred stock of the Interborough-Metropolitan Company are showing less inclination to assent to the plan of consolidation into the Interborough Consolidated Corporation than was expected by the sponsors of the plan. It was said yesterday by a bankerholder who had consented and who was urging the adoption of the plan of reorganization that the greatest obstacle to overcome by argument was the wiping out of the 38 per cent. accrued dividends on the present 5 per cent. preferred stock of the Interborough-Metropolitan. Under the proposed plan this accrued interest is renounced, but the new preferred stock is placed on a 6 per cent. basis. The banker referred to the accrued dividends as a "vision." The preferred stockholders never had a chance of getting their hands on those dividends, he said. "As a matter of fact, there is only one way of getting these accrued dividends paid up. By getting a 6 per cent. stock which will pay dividends in place of a 5 per cent. stock which does not pay dividends it is only a matter of time when the 38 per cent. will have been refunded. Presumably the holders of the preferred stock purchased it as an investment. This appeals to me as a good proposition from the investor's point of view."

Competition for Money.

With $100,000,000 of New York Central 6 per cent. debentures, $65,000,000 of Pennsylvania general 4½s, $25,000,000 of Argentine Government 6 per cent. notes and $30,000,000 of French Government one-year 5s all being offered in the space of a few weeks the investor does not have to accept anything but the highest grade of securities to obtain what would have been considered a dangerously high yield a few years back. So much borrowing on the part of corporations and Governments with good credit has left a bare market for many companies which would like to sell bonds, but which have a poor chance to place them with investors while more favorably known issues are succeeding one another. Formerly the railroad with a narrower margin of safety over its fixed obligations could finance itself by paying a high price for its money, but the interest rate has now been put so high on first class issues that the less desirable bonds would have to bear a rate at which it would be unprofitable to borrow.

TO SETTLE SIEGEL CLAIMS.

About 1,700 Creditors of Boston Store Will Divide $230,000.

BOSTON, May 6.—A final settlement of the claims against the Henry Siegel Company of Boston, on a basis of 27¼ per cent., was approved today by J. M. Olmstead, referee in bankruptcy. The settlement was effected through the withdrawal of a claim of $2,000,000 for the lease of the store buildings occupied by the company.

About $230,000 will be divided among

FINANCIAL NOTES.

Thomas C. Hovey, head of the loan department of the Liberty National Bank, has been appointed assistant cashier of that institution.

As successor trustee of a mortgage dated March 27, 1911, made by the Indian Refining Company, the Bankers Trust Company will receive until May 31 sealed proposals for the sale to it on June 24 of bonds to exhaust a sinking fund account of $49,652, at a price not exceeding 102 and accrued interest.

J. K. Rice, Jr., & Co. have issued a circular letter which discusses Interborough Rapid Transit Company stock.

The date for redemption of $1,500,000 one-year 5 per cent. notes of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company is May 22, instead of May 27, as announced through an error by the company on Wednesday.

The Bondholders' Committee of the New Orleans, Mobile & Chicago Railroad announces that the time for further deposits of bonds, unsecured debts, and the preferred and common stocks has been extended to May 31. It is said that more than 85 per cent. of the outstanding bonds have been deposited.

Directors of the Tidewater Oil Company held their annual meeting in Bayonne yesterday and elected these officers: R. D. Brown, President; W. S. Brown, First Vice President and Treasurer; Dickson Q. Brown, Second Vice President, and George W. Webb, Secretary.

Kuhn, Loeb & Co. Announce Price of $65,000,000 4½s to Public.

The $65,000,000 of general mortgage 4½ per cent. bonds of the Pennsylvania Railroad, taken by Kuhn, Loeb & Co., are to be offered to investors at 95½ and accrued interest, it was announced by the bankers last night. If the bonds are all sold at that price the railroad will receive an extra ¼ of 1 per cent. over the 95¼ per cent. guaranteed when arrangements were made for the sale.

The underwriting syndicate which included most of the active bond distributing houses, was closed yesterday, and subscriptions to the bonds will be closed at 3 P. M. on May 11 or earlier. A first payment of $50 per bond will be required, the remainder to be paid on June 1. Both principal and interest of the bonds will be payable without deduction for any taxes which the railroad company may be required to pay, excepting the Federal Income tax.

The sale supplies the Pennsylvania with the balance needed to take up $87,000,000 of convertible 3½s on Oct. 1, and will leave a balance of more than $20,000,000 for improvements. President Rea says that no further financing will be done by the company this year.

COTTON PRICES RISE AFTER WEAK OPENING

Indications That Urgent Liquidation Has Been Completed—Slump in Foreign Market.

LIVERPOOL A SELLER HERE

Yesterday's cotton market indicated by its action that urgent liquidation, which was the real cause of the decline, had been completed, at least temporarily. Liverpool showed striking weakness, and at the time the local market opened was 20 American points lower than due. The opening here was at a decline of 9 to 13 points, but first prices proved to be the lowest of the session.

During the first hour the market was highly unsettled and Liverpool was a large seller here. These offerings were well absorbed by shorts and new buyers, and with the close of Liverpool the local market made a good recovery with prices 30 to 35 points up from the lowest of the day. There was a reaction toward the close on profit taking by early buyers, and the undertone was described as barely steady.

Practically no features received consideration except the war in Europe and the threat of hostilities between Japan and China. The more favorable view ... the chief cause of the recovery.

Local bears are inclined to make a great deal of the possibilities that may arise from the sending of an ultimatum by Japan to China. Japan is a large buyer of American cotton and China is a heavy buyer of manufactured goods, not only from this country but from Europe. The Manchester market undoubtedly would be adversely affected by a way which would cut off consumption of cotton goods by China.

A great deal of the pressure that has come on the market recently has resulted from sales by Liverpool in an attempt to effect wider straddle differences between the two markets. Liverpool traders have sold heavily here and bought in Liverpool in the expectation of an increase in the discount of New York under Liverpool. This operation is believed to have been initiated at differences ranging around 110 points, but yesterday the differences narrowed to less than 100 points, while both markets were open. There is evidence of a very large Liverpool short interest here for straddle account.

There was no feature to the weather in the Eastern belt. Further rains were reported in Texas, while private wires reported snow at Dalhart and a two-inch rainfall at Gainesville, Texas; also heavy rains were reported all over North Texas.

Southern spot markets as officially reported were unchanged to 12 to 18 decline.

The local market for spot cotton was quiet and unchanged, 10.05 for middling upland.

The range of contract prices was as follows, (closed barely steady:)

NIPE BAY COMPANY

FIRST MORTGAGE 5% SINKING FUND GOLD BONDS

Due May 1, 1925

The Company owns a sugar plantation and a modern sugar mill, situated on the shores of Nipe Bay, Cuba. The real estate comprises 127,789 acres, of which 36,936 acres are now under cultivation.

From a letter of Mr. Charles A. Hubbard, Treasurer of the Company, copy of which will be sent upon request, we summarize as follows:

Controlled by United Fruit Company through ownership of majority of capital stock.

Closed First Mortgage on all the Company's real estate, and all improvements thereon, including buildings, sugar mills, machinery, railways and wharves.

Present properties conservatively valued at more than $10,000,000, or about three times this First Mortgage Bond issue.

Average annual net earnings six years to June 30, 1914, were 3.77 times interest on these bonds. Estimated net earnings year ending June 30, 1915, $2,000,000, or more than eleven times this interest.

Annual Sinking Fund years 1918 to 1924 inclusive will retire $150,000 bonds per year, or 30% of the entire issue before maturity.

The legality of this issue will be passed upon by Messrs. Fish, Richardson, Herrick & Neare, of Boston. Our negotiable temporary receipts will be delivered pending the preparation of the permanent bonds.

PRICE 94 AND INTEREST, YIELDING ABOUT 5¾ PER CENT.

FINANCIAL.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC FINANCES OF THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS, CITY HALL.

New Orleans, April 26th, 1915.

The City of New Orleans, acting under authority of Act 179 of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana for the year 1908, ratified by constitutional amendment, and now a part of the Constitution of the State of Louisiana, will receive sealed proposals at the office of the Commissioner of Public Finances of the City of New Orleans up to twelve (12) o'clock noon, on the 26th day of May, 1915, for the purchase of $500,000.00 in face value of Public Belt Railroad Bonds of the City of New Orleans, authorized by and to be issued under and subject to the act aforementioned, and the constitutional bers, denominations and maturities of the amendment ratifying same, and of the numthorized issue of $2,000,000, and in the form of and in accordance with the bond schedule of the maturities of the entire authorized issue as given and prescribed by an ordinance of the City of New Orleans, being Ordinance No. 9628, N. C. S., approved May 14, 1912, and Ordinance No. 2340 Commission Council Series, approved April 20th, 1915, of said city, authorizing the present offering.

Three hundred and fifty of said bonds are of the denomination of $1000 and three hundred of the denomination of $500, and bear interest at the rate of five per cent per annum, evidenced by coupons attached, payable semi-annually on the first days of January and July, respectively of each year.

Said bonds are the second issuance out of the total amount authorized by said act and constitutional amendment, and are of the numbers, amounts and maturities, as follows, to-wit:

Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($350,000) of said bonds shall be of the denomination of $1000 each, and one hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($150,000) of the denomination of $500 each, and of the numbers, amounts and maturities as follows, to-wit:

Fifty (50) bonds, Nos. 6451 to 6500, inclusive, of the denomination of $1000, aggregating in face value $50,000, maturing July 1, 1953;

One hundred (100) bonds, Nos. 5901 to 6000, inclusive, of the denomination of $500, aggregating in face value $50,000, maturing July 1, 1953;

Fifty (50) bonds, Nos. 6401 to 6450, inclusive, of the denomination of $1000, aggregating in face value $50,000, maturing July 1, 1952;

One hundred (100) bonds, Nos. 5801 to 5900, inclusive, of the denomination of $500, aggregating in face value $50,000, maturing July 1, 1952;

Fifty (50) bonds, Nos. 6351 to 6400, inclusive, of the denomination of $1000, aggregating in face value $50,000, maturing July 1, 1951;

One hundred (100) bonds, Nos. 5701 to 5800, inclusive, of the denomination of $500, aggregating in face value $50,000, maturing July 1, 1951.

Said bonds are subject to call by the City of New Orleans on the first day of July, 1939, or on any interest day thereafter, at par and accrued interest on thirty (30) days notice of its intention to so redeem, published in the official newspaper of the City of New Orleans.

They are, by the aforesaid act and constitutional amendment, exempt from all State, Parish and Municipal taxes, and may be legally invested for the estates of minors and of interdicts, and are receivable by State, Parish and Municipal officers, where, by law, deposits of bonds are allowed or required to be made.

The payment of the principal and interest of said bonds is made a preferential charge upon the net revenues of the Public Belt Railroad of the City of New Orleans, and are and will be issued under and subject to the aforementioned statutes and ordinances, all of which are hereby referred to and made part of this advertisement for greater certainty and particularity.

Said proposals shall be received under and subject to the following conditions, to-wit:

Proposals must be in writing, sealed, and marked on the outside of the envelope "Proposals for the purchase of $500,000 of Public Belt Railroad Bonds of the City of New Orleans," and shall likewise be accompanied by a certified check on some chartered bank in the City of New Orleans, for an amount equal to one per cent. of the aggregate amount of the bid, which said check of the successful bidder or bidders shall be cashed and the proceeds retained by the City of New Orleans as a guarantee that the successful bidder or bidders will comply with its or their bids, and the said proceeds shall be applied to the payment of the bonds last delivered to the successful bidder or bidders, respectively. In case of the neglect or refusal to comply with any bid, the proceeds of said check shall be forfeited to the Public Belt Railroad Commission of the City of New Orleans.

No sale shall be made unless the aggregate of the bids received equals the full amount of the present offering of $500,000, in face value, and the adjudication shall be made to the highest bidder, provided, however, that no adjudication shall take place for less than par and accrued interest. All matured interest coupons shall be cut from said bonds and cancelled, and the successful bidder shall pay the interest which may have accrued on said bonds up to the date of delivery. The bonds shall be paid for in cash as fast as said bonds can be signed and delivered. All bonds will be delivered within thirty days from the opening of said bids. The right is reserved to reject any and all bids.

Further particulars and information will be furnished on application to W. B. Thompson, Commissioner of Public Utilities, the Public Belt Railroad Commission, or to the undersigned. The final opinion of Wood & Oakley, lawyers, Chicago, Ill., as to the legality of this issue will be furnished to the successful bidder if so desired.

A. G. RICKS,
Commissioner of Public Finances of the City of New Orleans.

MATES QUIT MANY SHIPS.

Neptune Association Adopts New Policy in Strike.

Robert H. Cowan, Secretary of the Neptune Association, of 17 Battery Place, who is organizing the strike of masters and mates in the Atlantic coastwise service, said yesterday that the men had held a secret meeting on Wednesday night and decided upon new tactics.

"Our members have been playing into the hands of the companies," Mr. Cowan said, "by remaining on board until other officers could be obtained. From now on they will leave the ships on arrival in New York.

"The first, second and third officers of the Southern Pacific steamship El Sud quit work today, which prevented the vessel from leaving at 3 P. M., according to schedule. Three mates left the Clyde steamships Araphoe, Mohawk and Cherokee, the Mallory steamships Rio Grande and Lampassas, Southern Pacific vessels Comus, El Cid, El Valle, El Mar, El Alba and Momus, the Southern Steamship Company's Ossabaw and Altamaha and the Coamo and Massapequa of the New York and Porto Rico Company.

"Arthur McGray, President of the Neptune Association has called on Collector Malone to ask if he could not prevent steamships leaving that were short of their complement of officers."

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE.

Although war considerations imparted much nervousness to the trading on the Consolidated Stock Exchange, it was early noticeable that the urgent selling pressure of the day before was absent. The market tone was subject to abrupt changes during the day, but the general tendency was toward betterment. In a number of instances substantial price improvements were recorded. Trading was active, with commission houses busy with a heavy volume of orders, which included many fractional lot transactions.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company

General Mortgage 4½% Gold Bonds

Due June 1, 1965

INTEREST PAYABLE JUNE 1 AND DECEMBER 1

Coupon bonds in denomination of $1,000. each with privilege of registration as to principal and exchangeable for bonds registered as to both principal and interest. Fully registered bonds re-exchangeable for coupon bonds.

Both principal and interest of the bonds will be payable in gold without deduction for any tax or taxes which the Railroad Company may be required to pay, or retain therefrom under any present or future laws of the United States or of the State of Pennsylvania, excepting any Federal Income Tax.

SAMUEL REA, Esq., President of The Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in a letter dated May 6, 1915, copies of which may be obtained from the undersigned, writes in part as follows:

"In order to provide for its presently maturing obligations and future requirements, The Pennsylvania Railroad Company is about to execute a mortgage, to secure an issue of bonds to be known as its General Mortgage Bonds, which is to cover, subject to prior liens for the retirement of which General Mortgage Bonds are to be reserved, all the railroad property and leaseholds of The Pennsylvania Railroad Company (excepting certain unimportant leaseholds), including the valuable terminals in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Harrisburg and other places in the State of Pennsylvania, and valuable rolling stock, shops and other equipment owned by the Company.

"The proceeds of the $65,000,000 bonds which you have agreed to purchase will provide the Company with the balance of funds necessary to pay off the Convertible Bonds which mature on October 1st, 1915; the other obligations maturing in 1915 and the cost of additions and betterments to its railroad and equipment planned for the balance of this year having already been provided for.

"The authorized total issue of the General Mortgage Bonds will be limited at all times to the then outstanding and paid-up capital stock of the Company, and the mortgage securing these bonds will be in such form and terms as shall be necessary in the opinion of counsel to make the bonds issued thereunder a legal investment for savings banks and life insurance companies under the present laws of the State of New York.

"The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has at present outstanding $499,265,700 Capital Stock, and has uninterruptedly paid dividends on its outstanding stock since 1856, the present dividend being at the rate of 6% per annum.

"The gross income of the Company for the year ended December 31st, 1914, applicable to interest charges, rentals, etc., amounted to $51,792,223, while the aggregate of these fixed charges for the year ended December 31st, 1914, including interest, rentals, etc., amounted to $17,701,458.

"The General Mortgage Bonds are issuable bearing interest at such rate or rates, and with such maturity or maturities, not earlier, however, than the maturity of the General Mortgage bonds now to be issued, as the Board of Directors may from time to time determine.

"Application will be made to list these bonds on the New York Stock Exchange."

THE UNDERSIGNED WILL RECEIVE SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR THE ABOVE BONDS AT 98½% AND ACCRUED INTEREST TO DATE OF DELIVERY.

The subscription will be closed at three o'clock p. m. on Tuesday, May 11, 1915, or earlier, the right being reserved to reject any applications and to award a smaller amount than applied for. The undersigned reserve the right to close the subscription at any time without notice.

A first payment of $50 per $1,000 bond subscribed for must accompany all subscriptions. The balance of the amount due on bonds allotted upon subscriptions will be payable in New York Funds on Tuesday, June 1, 1915, at the office of the undersigned. Pending the execution of the mortgage and the engraving of the bonds, temporary certificates of the Company will be issued.

If no allotment be made, the first payment will be repaid in full, and if only a portion of the amount applied for be alloted, the balance of the first payment will be applied towards the amount due on Tuesday, June 1, 1915. No interest will be allowed on such first payment. If any further balance remains, such balance will be repaid. Failure to pay the second installment, when due, will render the previous payment liable to forfeiture.

WHAT IS NEW HAVEN WORTH?
Is there any justification for the present price of New York, New Haven & Hartford stock? What is the intrinsic worth of this stock, and what will be its position after the disintegration plans have been completed?
These are some of the questions that Mr. Moody answers in a special analysis of the property which we have just issued. Mr. Moody has been absolutely right in his analysis of the New Haven road for the past seven years.
A few copies of this special study are available for those who make the first inquiries.

United States Reduction and Refining Co.

First Mortgage Six Per Cent. Thirty-Year Gold Bonds

The United States Reduction and Refining Company having made certain defaults under the terms and conditions of its First Mortgage dated July 1, 1901, securing the above mentioned bonds, and a Receiver having been appointed on April 22, 1915, in a suit brought by The New York Trust Company, as successor trustee, in the District Court of the United States in the District of Colorado, for the protection of the interests of the bondholders, and it appearing that the interest due July 1, 1915, on said bonds will not be paid, the undersigned at the request of the owners of a large amount of the bonds have agreed to act as a Committee to represent the interests of the bondholders. It is of the utmost importance to enable the Committee to deal promptly and effectively with the situation that bondholders act in concert for their mutual protection, and that they deposit their bonds with the Committee without delay.

The New York Trust Company, 26 Broad Street, New York City, New York, has been appointed the Depositary of the Committee to receive deposits of bonds and to issue Certificates of Deposit therefor.

The Deposit Agreement has been prepared, under the terms and provisions of which the Committee will receive deposits of bonds, with July, 1915, and subsequent coupons attached. Copies of this Agreement may be obtained from the Depositary, or from the Secretary of the Committee.

American Arms for Australia.

Manifests of vessels leaving this port for Australia reveal that the Colonial Governments there are supplying their troops in part at least with firearms and ammunition purchased in this country. One of the last steamers to leave here for Sydney, the Port Curtis, carried rifles worth $10,033 and cartridges valued at $12,863. The same vessel also had aboard 96 automobiles appraised at $26,625. Other leading articles now being sent to Australia in fair-sized quantities are typewriters, shoes, chemicals, machinery of all kinds, petroleum, lubricating oil, and turpentine. Colors outgoing on one steamer had a value of $3,521.

A Puzzling Situation.

The clothing trade as a whole finds it difficult to explain the nature of the present demand in accordance with accepted standards. Usually, when a conservative spirit manifests itself among consumers, the demand is for something of a staple nature. This precedent, however, has been swept aside, and, though there is more than the usual economy, the retailers are buying not staples but, in many instances, anything that savors of innovation or novelty. An example is given in the falling off in the volume of serge suit sales. There seems to be no indication given at present of serges regaining their past popularity, although at the same time no other fabric has taken their place.

Cocoa Is Dull and Easier.

With the decline in the export demand for raw cocoa that has developed in this market in the last few weeks and the general paucity of demand from domestic users, prices on this commodity have taken somewhat of a slump of late. This has been aided by liberal receipts from primary points and a tendency toward easier prices there also. Despite the downward revisions in question, prices in this market still stand considerable above the levels which prevail in normal times. Present quotations range from 14¾ to 15 cents a pound for cocoa from Haiti and Jamaica to 20 to 21 cents a pound for the Maracaibo product. Stocks total approximately 40,700 bags, of which the Caracas and Sanchez grades make up more than half.

To Campaign Against Coupons.

Secretary Pinkham and John T. Kirby, field manager of the National Retail Dry Goods Association, have started on trips that will take them through the principal cities of the country, during which they will speak at meetings of retailers against manufacturers giving coupons. This is one of the first steps which the organization has decided upon in its campaign against premium giving. The subject of price maintenance will also be given publicity. Mr. Pinkham's trip will include Washington, Atlanta, New Orleans, Los Angeles, and other cities on the Coast and in the Middle West. He will return by way of Chicago. Mr. Kirby will travel through New York State and Pennsylvania and will visit Minneapolis and St. Louis among other cities.

Silk Imports Again Decline.
